THE BOOK
ESSENTIAL GUIDE to PUBLISHING for CHILDREN
2018
WELCOME TO THE BOOK: THE ESSENTIAL GUIDE TO PUBLISHING FOR CHILDREN.

This book is the crown gem of the Society of Children’s Book Writers and Illustrators publications. It contains virtually all the information you will need about writing and illustrating for the children’s book market. It will help you chart your creative work from inception all the way through the process of publishing and marketing.

THE BOOK includes the latest market reports, articles on social media, discussions of emerging publishing options, and up-to-the-minute directories of everything from agents to book reviewers to relevant blog sites. Time-sensitive material contained in THE BOOK is updated regularly on our website, scbwi.org.

The SCBWI staff takes great pride in presenting you with this invaluable tool that will optimize your career, whether you are already well published or a newcomer to the field. Use it as your primary reference and workbook.

Don’t hesitate to contact us if you have any remaining questions. We wish you great success in the children’s book field and hope that THE BOOK will guide you along your creative path.

With all best wishes,

Lin Oliver | Executive Director
Stephen Mooser | President

So you’ve written a book or an article for young readers? Whether you’re submitting to agents or have decided to submit directly to editors on your own, here are the basics on formatting your writing and the process of sending it out.

QUERY FIRST
A query letter is always recommended before submitting a full manuscript. This letter is an introduction of you and your story for the editor. If your manuscript is of interest, the editor will request a submission. Read “The Query Letter” on page 13 of this guide, or online at scbwi.org “Resource Library.” Click on SCBWI THE BOOK.

AGENTS
While an agent is not necessary to submit a manuscript to an editor, many publishers accept only solicited material represented by an agent. When submitting to an agent, here are some things you should know:

» Not all agents handle children’s material. Consult the Agents Directory on page 145, or online in the “Resource Library” portion of the SCBWI website. Click on “SCBWI THE BOOK Online” and “Directories & Resources.”
» Most agents list their submission guidelines and procedures at their websites. It is imperative that you research these guidelines prior to submitting.
» The SCBWI recommends that you not deal with agents who charge up-front for any of their services or have a “reading” fee.

SUBMITTING YOUR MANUSCRIPT
Most legitimate publishers post their submissions guidelines at their website. A simple Google search will pull up any publishing house you might want to submit to. Be sure to read their specific submission policies prior to sending in a manuscript.

To assist you in determining which publishers might be a good match for your writing, the SCBWI offers a resource called “Edited By,” a house-by-house listing of what editors have published recently. A careful investigation of publishers’ catalogs (available by request from the publisher), Children’s Books in Print (available in the “Resource Library”), various marketing lists found in writers’ periodicals, and, most importantly, examination of books themselves should indicate to you which publishing houses would be most receptive to your work.

Here are some basic suggestions:

» Your manuscript should be addressed to the editor who requested it in response to your query letter. Include a self-addressed, stamped envelope of the correct size to hold your manuscript, with a sufficient amount of postage affixed.
» Include a brief cover letter with only information that is necessary for the editor to know, as it relates to your manuscript (e.g., for nonfiction, describe what qualifies you to discuss your subject; for fiction, include any previous publishing credits). If you are submitting your manuscript in response to a previous query, be sure to mention this in your cover letter.
» Keep copies of all correspondence.
» Unless you are a professional illustrator, do not include illustrations with your picture book manuscript. An art director will choose an illustrator that suits your work.
» Do not attempt to indicate where you would like illustrations to be placed in your picture book story, or what they should portray. This is the job of the art director and the illustrator.
» While not all editors will do so, you may include a self-addressed, stamped envelope to encourage the acknowledgment of your manuscript.

A decision on your manuscript may take six months or more. Some editors are slower to respond than others. If you have not had a response at the end of three months, send a polite letter or e-mail of inquiry to the editor and ask about the status of your manuscript.

Submitting a manuscript to several editors at the same time (a policy called “multiple submissions”) is sometimes frowned upon by editors, but if you choose to do so, you must notify the editor up front. Simply include a sentence in your cover letter stating that this is a “multiple submission.”

FORMATTING YOUR MANUSCRIPT

Here are suggested guidelines from the publishing industry:

- All manuscripts must be typed on 8½” x 11” white paper in black ink.
- Use 12-point Arial or Times New Roman.
- Double space all manuscripts.
- Pages should be numbered consecutively.
- The default margin settings that appear in a new Microsoft Word document are acceptable. If you are setting margins manually, use a 1-inch or 1.25-inch margin on each side of the page.
- Do not submit electronically (i.e., e-mail) unless the editor or agent specifically requests you do so.

Your Address
City, State ZIP
Your Telephone Number
Your E-mail Address

TITLE IN ALL CAPS (halfway down page)
By Your Name

Your story begins here...

NUMBER OF MANUSCRIPT PAGES

While there are no specific requirements, here are current market trends for the genres listed below. We recommend that you begin by visiting a bookstore (not a library) to see what books are currently being offered by publishers.

Agents and editors seek good writing. If your voice, plot and characters grab them, they will help you decide what genre best defines your book. Research prior to submitting will help you know where your specific story falls.

RESPONDING TO EDITORIAL FEEDBACK

If you receive a personal response from an editor with revision suggestions, but no formal contract, respond by thanking the editor for the time and interest given to your manuscript. Consider the editor’s suggestions carefully. If you decide that your manuscript would be improved by the editor’s suggestions, and complete the revisions, you are professionally obligated to send that manuscript back to that editor.

No editor spends time writing a detailed editorial letter without expecting to see the manuscript again. Mention in the letter accompanying your revised manuscript that you have followed the editor’s suggestions for revisions.

MAGAZINES

Most magazines for young readers publish their submission guidelines at their websites. Many include their editorial deadlines.
and calendars so that you can submit work that is appropriate for the theme of a specific issue. Be sure to research the submission policies for the specific publication you are interested in prior to submitting. Here are some general guidelines:

» Include the word count on the first page of your article submission.

» Magazine publishers generally do not acknowledge receipt of articles.

» It is appropriate to inquire about your article after two months have passed.

» Some magazines, especially in the religious field, will accept multiple submissions.

» Magazines plan issues far in advance; it is important to keep this in mind when submitting seasonal material.

» Some magazines pay upon publication. They may hold your submission for a considerable length of time before either printing or returning it.

» Most children’s magazines do not pay large amounts for their material, but can provide the novice writer with valuable experience.
Sometimes the same author who is capable of writing a book, short story, or article is filled with anxiety and dread when considering what to write in a query letter. If you are one of these people, I hope that by the end of this article you will be free from the qualms of the query.

Part of the confusion about what a query letter should say comes from the fact that there are different genres. An effective query letter that represents a nonfiction magazine article will be very different from one for a YA novel. Then within each genre, each manuscript is unique, which means that every query letter must be one-of-a-kind.

The most important thing to understand, regardless of whether the manuscript is fiction or nonfiction, is that a query letter has one purpose and one purpose only: to cause the editor or agent to want to read your manuscript or book proposal. That’s it. Period. The writer’s job is to craft a letter that will create that desire.

Think of a query letter as a sales tool that can market a product. A writer’s product is a group of words that tell a story. The query letter is an advertisement that should make the reader want to know more about the product. In some ways, that might sound harsh. It may even contradict the “touchy, feely, love of books” reason most people become writers. Yet writers must understand that they work in a creative business. The process of writing is creative, but publishing is a business. In order for a writer to get the words they have lovingly crafted into the hands of children to enjoy, they need to market their product. Often that marketing plan includes a query letter.

A query letter should fit on one single page—never longer. It should be clear and concise so that a busy editor gets the meaning of the letter in one quick read. A query letter is a business letter. In it, the writer is not looking for a friend; he/she is looking for an editor or agent. Since the goal is to create a professional relationship, the tone of the letter should not be overly chummy or personal. When an editor or agent reads a query, their impression should be that the author is a professional writer, not an amateur who is dabbling with a hobby. Part of being a professional is following the guidelines found in market guides such as Children’s Writer’s and Illustrator’s Market. Each publisher is specific about what he/she wants to see in a submissions package, so writers should send the requested items. For both fiction and nonfiction, what each company requests varies widely. Some book publishers ask for a query only, while others request a query, outline, synopsis, and sample chapters.

So what makes an effective query letter? Although each letter will be different, each one should contain four basic parts: hook, summary, biographical information, and a closing.

Hook

A writer wants to hook his/her readers with the first sentence of a manuscript. Likewise, the first line of a query letter should hook the reader. Think of this section as a sound bite, not the entire newscast. Find an original, creative way to begin the letter using something relating to the manuscript that makes the reader want to find out more. The only exception to beginning your query with a hook would be if the writer has personally met the editor or agent. In that case, it could begin with something like, “I enjoyed meeting you recently at the Arkansas SCBWI conference and appreciate your willingness to consider submissions from attendees.” Editors are usually nice people who would like for writers they have met personally to succeed, so they will consider such a query carefully. If a query begins with a meeting reminder, it should be brief, then go immediately to the hook.

Summary

In this section, summarize what your manuscript is about in three or four sentences. For novels, this does not mean the plot points of your novel. It means an overview that includes the setting, characters, conflict, and how the novel is different from other similar novels. For nonfiction, it means an overview of how the material will be handled, the availability of photos, access to experts, and facts or statistics that indicate how many potential readers may be interested in such a book. As in every section of the query letter, the summary details must be explained in an interesting, exciting way.

Biographical Information

In the hook and summary sections of a query letter, the writer’s goal is to convince the editor or agent to read the offered manuscript.
In the biographical information section, the goal is to convince the editor or agent that the writer of the query is the only one who could successfully write the manuscript described. In this brief section, the writer must highlight the areas of his/her life that make him/her an expert on the topic. For example, let’s say a writer is a physical therapist and she spends two weeks every summer volunteering at an archaeological dig. If that writer was marketing a novel she had written about an ice skater who undergoes months of rehabilitation to overcome an injury, then she would highlight the fact that she had been a physical therapist for twenty years and had helped many young athletes recover from their injuries. However, if that same writer was marketing a nonfiction book manuscript about an archaeological dig, she would not mention that she was a physical therapist. Instead, she would highlight her previous work at the dig.

The biographical section is also where publishing credits are listed—best-known ones first. If the writer has signed a contract but the article or book has not yet been published, they could say something like, “I have an article forthcoming in the May issue of Cricket magazine.” If a writer does not have any publishing credits, they should not call attention to the fact. Instead say, “I am an active member of the SCBWI.”

Writers should always present themselves as professionals, even when they are just beginning. Never make comments like “This is my first submission to an editor, so I really hope you like it,” or “Six different editors have already rejected this manuscript, but I think it is right for you,” or “I read this to my son’s second grade class and they just loved it.”

Closing

Bring the letter quickly to a close. It could be something as simple as “I look forward to hearing from you” or “Would you like to see the complete book proposal for Successful Query Letters?” However, if the letter runs too long and needs to be cut down, the closing is where to start chopping. Although a polite closing is nice if you have the space, they already know why you are writing to them.

Finally, the query letter should match the tone of the manuscript. If the manuscript you are marketing is humorous, the query should be humorous. If it is a mystery, the letter should convey a mysterious feeling. A nonfiction book about an exciting new discovery should express a sense of anticipation.

Some writers spend months, even years, writing and revising their manuscript; then, when it is finished, wonder how they could possibly describe their work in a one-page letter. It is accomplished when a writer works on the query just as they did the manuscript: Write a rough draft, then revise, revise, and revise again—until it is as good as you can make it. Any writer can write an effective query letter. After all, no one believes in a manuscript more than its author.

Tips from Industry Insiders

While every query letter is different and should reflect your personality, there are some tried and true dos and don’ts when you write one. We spoke with many publishing professionals, and following are the top ten dos and don’ts when writing your query letter.

Dos

1. Keep it simple! If it’s more than a paragraph, most editors/agents will skip it.
2. Be friendly, but professional. No need to be super serious, but remember that you and the reader are not personal friends.
3. Include a one- or two-sentence teaser for your story. Think of it as advertising copy, not a plot summary. (Look at flap copy for examples.)
4. Close with a short bio and include any publication credits.
5. Know how to categorize your book in the correct age group and genre.
6. Research who you’re submitting to—what kinds of books (subject matter, age level, genre, etc.) do they publish, what they are interested in (see if you can find interviews they’ve given), etc.
7. Let the reader know if you’ve met at a conference or workshop.
8. Always include a personalized salutation. Do get the spelling of their name—and gender!—correct!
9. Have a strong opening, something to hook the editor or agent.
10. Try to read something an editor has edited or that an agent represents so you know their taste.

Don’ts

1. Don’t open with a question.
2. Don’t include marketing plans.
3. If an editor or agent passes on seeing your work, do not contact him/her asking that he/she reconsider your query. Your energies would be better spent on an editor or agent with unreserved enthusiasm for your project. Similarly, please don’t ask the editor or agent to provide feedback on your query.
4. Don’t mention that your niece, student, child, grandchild, or friend loves your work. That doesn’t matter—what matters is if it’s good and intriguing and compelling and stands out from everything else that’s being published.
5. Don’t compare your work to something unprecedentedly successful, like the Harry Potter or Twilight series. Those are impossible-to-replicate successes. Find something more relevant and normal, but still successful.
6. Don’t send a picture book manuscript to a teen novel editor. Know editors’ lists and what they acquire before you submit.
7. Don’t follow up less than three to four weeks after submitting a project.
8. Don’t talk about sequels you have planned.
9. Don’t say “I’m a new writer” or “This is the first book I have ever written.”
10. Don’t be overly familiar with the editor or agent you are sending a query letter.
For some writers, the thought of writing a synopsis, a short summary of their book, causes panic, downturned eyes and heavy sighs. It can be a somber task to whittle one’s beloved story down to its bare essentials. But it can also be exhilarating. Here are some tips to guide you through the process.

Attempt to fit the essentials of your story into a neat package—between one to three pages—though lengths vary depending on the audience. Synopses (plural based on the Latin root) are often requested by agents and editors. Writers may or may not be given a word count or page length guide. Either way, a writer does best to ponder the highs and lows of his or her story, the main character’s arc, the tone and setting before beginning. Then take a deep breath and begin, knowing that there will be a chance to edit and revise.

A GUIDE TO WRITING SYNOPSES:

Step 1: Always Use the Third Person Present Tense
Regardless of the tense in which the story is written or the voice of the narrator, a synopsis should always be written in the third person, present tense.

Step 2: Write a One Sentence Character Arc Before Starting
Write a one sentence arc for the main character before starting, and keep this sentence available for later use, and as a reference guide to keep you on track.

Step 3: Hook the Reader
Start your synopsis with a gripping, one sentence summary that captivates and mirrors the tone of the story. A mystery may use a mysterious question. A synopsis for a middle grade novel or a picture book might require vocabulary more elevated than that used in the story, but the language should not be too overblown. A tone that evokes the story itself is best. The hook provokes thought and forces the reader to ask: What happens next? It can be the same few sentences used in a query letter. In fact, the beginning of your synopsis might sound very much like the plot-summary paragraph of a query letter.

Step 4: Introduce the Main Character
Describe the main character’s MOTIVATION, CONFLICT and GOALS.

Step 5: Construct the Body of Your Synopsis
Use paragraphs to write out the main events of each chapter. Or pick out the high and low points and chart the story’s progression from beginning to end. Major events focus on the rising action and the main character’s conflict or goals, and how they are achieved or not achieved.

Keep paragraphs tight. Only details critical for the reader’s understanding should be included. Each paragraph must include: an ACTION, REACTION and DECISION by a main character. Include thoughts, beliefs, mistaken-beliefs and assumptions, if they are critical to the outcome of the story.

For Example: Sam takes Jeremy’s lunch box at recess. Jeremy runs after him, falls down and skins his knee. Jeremy decides he will take a paper bag lunch from now on and throw it away.

Step 6: Put Character Names in ALL CAPS
Which secondary characters are involved in the major scenes included in the synopsis? Each new character’s name should be written in all capitals the first time it appears, exactly as it appears in the story. Characters mentioned unnecessarily will only take up valuable space.

Step 7: Reveal the Ending
Tell the story to the end. Even if the story is a mystery, do not be mysterious with the ending. State it clearly and briefly. Devote one to two paragraphs to the CLIMAX (CRISIS) and RESOLUTION (ENDING). Describe the main character’s final struggle and its outcome. Why does this matter? This is the time to state what the main character learns.

Highlight the main character’s personality with one or two vivid adjectives. This may seem like type-casting, but it a useful tool that allows the reader visualize the character quickly.

For Example: Shy, but adventurous Katy longs to discover what is hidden in the old chest in the attic that belonged to her grandmother. But first she must gather up the courage to ask her stern grandfather for the key.
Don’t keep editors or agents guessing.

For Example: In the end, Jess makes peace with her brother, pays back the money she stole from him and ends up with a new best friend. She learns that if you make a mistake, sometimes you get a chance to make it up to the person.

Step 8: Revise and Polish

Each sentence must flow and convey the power, excitement, and humor of the story. Use strong adjectives and verbs. Keep revising and editing until the synopsis flows and is the length you desire. You may start with a three to four page summary and whittle it down to one or two pages. Be patient. The process is a valuable one.

Step 9: Remove Extra Words

A synopsis should be quick to read. It must not slow down. It is all exposition, but it must not drag even the tiniest bit. The bare bones of the story speak for itself now, with no flowery details or quirky dialogue to break up the sentences. Though, it is possible that a quote or two might appear in a synopsis, this would be if the words said by a character are themselves part of the plot.

Step 10: Check for the Main Character’s Arc

Your main character need not change dramatically, but the change should be meaningful. Maybe he or she learns a new way of looking at the world, overcomes a fear or repairs a broken relationship. Something thought lost should be regained. The synopsis should reflect the main character’s journey through the story.

Step 11: Read it Aloud

Does the synopsis sound like the story only shorter? If yes, then you have done a good job. Reading aloud is the best way to hear your writing. It can be to an audience or to yourself.

Good luck—and enjoy! ☺
Even with the big changes in the publishing world going on today, it is still true that some of the best art to be seen is in children’s books! It is also a constantly changing challenge. The market by nature is competitive and cyclical. Artists need to be aware of this fact and plan for it. There is very little room for any mediocrity. What was acceptable just years ago is not good enough today. Artists need to continually learn, grow, and change. Don’t follow trends—make them! Be the very best you can be as an artist and a promoter of your talent, and cherish your passion for your craft. Get it seen!

What should I put in my portfolio?

Let the art do the talking! It’s your style, your characters, your color palette, your conceptual thinking, your design sense, that will attract the attention of art buyers. The purpose of a portfolio, whether in a book, online, or in a mailing package, is to get the best you have to offer into the hands of the buyers who might want to hire you. These samples must do the right kind of talking for you. It is more professional to keep the portfolio simple, neat, orderly, and a manageable size (8 1/2 x 11, or an iPad maybe). You will want to present a competent, consistent style and attitude. Do not confuse.

Be memorable. Include about ten to fifteen strong pieces of art that show the range and consistency of your talents. Definitely have full-color and perhaps a few black-and-white samples (line and/or tone). Show only styles and mediums you are comfortable and proficient with and can afford to do (time = money!). It seems obvious, but show only your best work. Any weakness will be spotted by the buyers, and they will pass. You may show original artwork during a personal visit to a publisher, but never leave or send original artwork for viewing. If you cannot get in the door (and it’s harder and harder), have a copy portfolio with reproductions only that you can leave behind and pick up later. Better yet, have printed sheets of samples you can leave for them to keep with contact information, website, and blog links.

Most picture books and educational assignments contain representations of children and/or animals, so you should show both if you do both well. Show character development by having the same characters in different narrative settings, doing different activities, and showing different expressions and moods. Remember to avoid presentation poses generally for trade work.

Picture book action is going on within its own world. Characters are normally unaware of the readers’/viewers’ observations. Your images should reflect this. Some educational work and greeting cards may use the presentation posture more often.

If you are interested in doing jacket art for middle grade or young adult (YA) novels, you should also include images of preteens and teens in appropriate settings. Perhaps design and show mock jackets with titles as well. For middle grade chapter books, include black-and-white line and tone action vignettes. Think humor.

The inclusion of a book dummy along with your portfolio will help the editor/art director learn a great deal about the way you think about a book. This is particularly true if you have not been published. The dummy may reassure them that you are knowledgeable of the overall design of picture books. If you have a printed book, do include pages from it (perhaps the cover with text). They might ask for information about how the book sold, as the bottom line is more important than ever now.

For the dummy, you might illustrate a favorite fairy tale, folktale (don’t be trite), or original story, or reillustrate another book just for show. Use written text as part of your design and layout. Include one or two finished color pieces of art. Work should be highly original, unique, and provocative, but at the same time kid-friendly and accessible. Think about reproduction, too; be careful of grays, browns, and muddied colors. The dummy should also show your ability to draw the same characters consistently and believably, in a variety of settings, positions, and attitudes. They will want the illustrations to relate to the manuscript text but give the reader more than just what the words would convey alone. This dummy book will let the editor know that you are at least somewhat familiar with the size, formats, number of pages, text placement possibilities, etc., of picture books. That will reassure them about your ability to work with a house’s designer and/or art director on a project.

Lastly, you may include a short résumé and keepers (leave-behinds, promotional sheets, postcards, or sourcebook reprint pages). If you have sent your portfolio and want it returned, send an SASE along as well, but I discourage you from sending portfolios these days. Always keep in mind that it is the art that they will remember . . . or not. Meeting you, the person behind the art, will tell them a lot about how it might be to work with you, but ultimately it is your art that will make or break the connection. Leave them with the WOW factor, and then follow up several times a year with mailers or e-mailed JPEGs/PDFs and a hello!

How do I show my work to a publisher?

You must be seen to be hired. Do your homework! Go to libraries, bookstores, and Google to get familiar with the many different publishers and their past and current book lists. Study the books you particularly like in order to understand what makes them successful. What mediums are used? How do the illustrations show the story? Notice the pacing of the page turns. How have they made their characters interesting and believable? Send for publishers’ catalogs. Current lists of names, addresses, e-mails, etc., can be found in reference books at your library, lists provided by the SCBWI and updated each August, and by searching online. Most publishers will have their own guidelines/instructions for submission policies, and it’s important to follow these to make sure your work is seen and not discarded. Check out the publishers’ websites.

After your research is complete and you have a list of publishers that might be a good match with your style and story, check directly with the houses to confirm that the editors and/or art directors are still current. Turnover is high in the industry at times. If you cannot visit the house (and that is very difficult today), send a sample packet for them to keep in order to introduce yourself. This can be a single page or deluxe postcard with multiple images, or several printed glossy sheets. Not all buyers like to receive samples online, so don’t do this without checking first. You do not want to annoy them. DO NOT SEND ORIGINAL ARTWORK EVER. Do not send bigger than 8 1/2 x 11 pages for filing reasons. Mark each piece with your name and contact information and website . . . which you should have.

Include a short cover letter in this packet if you are combining several sheets. A résumé is only helpful if you have publishing credits. You might give some brief background information about yourself if you really think it might be helpful in filling their needs. Again, your art does the talking for you and will or will not make the desired impression. If you want your samples returned, include an SASE, but avoid this as they do not like it. You might try sending a small, self-stamped postcard with easily checked-off response possibilities, but you probably won’t hear back unless they have an assignment or want to see more. Buyers have precious little time. Do keep sending samples until they tell you to stop!

If you are able to make a trip to New York City, where the majority of publishers are based, do so! It’s a great learning experience and will show them that you are serious about illustrating for this market. Perhaps combine it with the SCBWI Midwinter Conference each January/February! This is a good way to actually get firsthand feedback and suggestions. Call or write at least three to four weeks in advance, and then confirm the day and times a few days to a week before the visit. Editors and art directors are extremely busy, and emergency meetings and crises come up throughout the day. Some houses will not see individual artists, but take advantage of their drop-off days. Try to allow plenty of time between appointments for travel around the city. Group visits near each other or within the same building whenever possible. Get a good bus and subway map—taxies are the easiest way to travel, but expensive. Ask what floor your meetings are on and where the reception area is located. Security is tight, and sometimes you have to wait on the ground floor. HINT: The SCBWI Metro New York chapter has a city buddy program to help visitors new to NYC . . . take advantage of it!

Should I present a book idea if I have one? (author/illustrators)

By all means, if you have an original story with text and pictures for a book project, submit them to a children’s book editor at a house you have researched and you feel might be interested. Be aware, though, that if the writing or art of current authors/artists on their list is too similar to yours, they might reject your proposal based only on that fact. Your submission should include:

» typed manuscript: double-spaced and presented separately from text pasted in dummy
» one or two samples of finished art: good color copies, not originals
» a dummy: a mock-up of the book in black-and-white sketches. This gives the buyer an idea of your characters in action, the flow of the pages, and your knowledge of making and general. Use the appropriate number of pages for the dummy, usually 32 (or 24, 40, 48)*. Start the numbering of the main story usually on the left-hand page. A 32-page book usually includes fourteen double-page spreads and a single final page, a title page, a credit page, a cover (possibly a wrap jacket), and sometimes endpapers.
» See paragraphs on ebooks and apps for more presentation information.

*Note: Why these numbers of pages? It is the most economical way to produce a printed picture book. A single sheet with multiple book pages on it is put through the press, then cut and folded into a complete book. The term F&G comes from the ‘folded and gathered’ process.

What techniques are used for illustrating children’s books?

Of course, today we have to define book! But let’s talk here about traditional, printed books. Any medium or technique that can be reproduced on a printed page is suitable for picture books. Choose any that are comfortable for you and that suit the type of book you are doing. If you are not sure about the medium, or it’s reproduction, be sure to discuss this with the art director. The most common mediums used today: pencil (graphite), ink, watercolor, acrylics, oils, gouache, pastel, cut paper, photography, and increasingly digital, of course. Reflective artwork is usually done on flexible paper illustration board for canvas. If you use hard, nonflexible board, films, pastels, or other high-maintenance media or backings, be sure to share this with the art director before beginning.

With the common use of today’s sophisticated electronic equipment for color separation, publishers are printing full-color books as a matter of course. Artists have more freedom than ever to work in any medium they choose. Electronic equipment can require flexible surfaces, but there are reproduction solutions that may add to the cost of production. Always check before starting your finishes if you have any doubts.

What is color pre-separation?
Artists rarely need to consider pre-separating colors; it is done inexpensively by very sophisticated electronic equipment, or by layering programs used by the artists on their home computers. The occasional two-color book or educational job may require separation, but the buyer will tell you how they wish this to be done. If you are interested in the time-consuming old-school methods, you can Google it!

Must/should I have an agent represent me?

It is never necessary to have an artist agent represent you . . . but it can be very helpful! There are several reasons for wanting to work with an agent. If you do not live near enough to visit the larger NYC and Boston publishing houses, an agent may do this visiting for you. Many houses now do not accept unsolicited artwork or manuscripts from writers or artists, but will always do so from an agent. Agents have ongoing business relationships with editors and creative directors and can encourage them to try their talent group. Editors will occasionally send manuscripts to respected agents (literary and artist agents) to have them suggest artists who might work for their story. There is a certain professionalism that is assumed when an artist is represented. If the artist is a poor businessperson, an agent can be invaluable.

It is unusual to be picked up by a representative early in your art career. Artists need to do their own homework and research to learn about the market(s) they wish to work in. This learning process helps with gaining a more realistic expectation of the market. Artists need to work at their style development to learn what they do best. A good agent will continue to work on the artist’s personal artistic development and expand the market possibilities as their relationship continues. Not all agents do, however.

Finding a good match with an agent can be as time-consuming as getting published on your own. Some agents represent artists only in the children’s markets, some in advertising and editorial as well, or exclusively. Some are literary and artist agents. Some are very large operations with many reps, and others are single rep agencies offering much personal contact. Even when you find the perfect marriage possibility, the rep might not have room to take you on at the present time. Be sure to ask a lot of questions, know their expectations, and know how that meshes with yours. Talk to a couple of their other artists and clients perhaps (with permission), study their contract obligations carefully, and be somewhat patient once the relationship begins—it takes time to get your work known! Keep the interactive communications very open and honest always. Ethical, professional behavior is expected on both sides, and also assumed by the buyers using agents to find artists. The SCBWI has a good listing of agents in this market, and you can research them further online, too. Do spend time on their websites to get to know them before sending off samples.

What should I do if asked to illustrate an uncontracted manuscript?

Say, “Thank you. I’m flattered, but no.” Do not work for an author directly unless you understand that the author has no authority to hire you as an illustrator for a publisher. Editors choose the illustrators for their books. They have the experience and knowledge to match the right illustrator with the right manuscript and demand a free hand in doing this. Many beginning writers will think that presenting art with their picture book manuscript will help their chances of publication, when actually it will probably hurt it. Books are manuscript-driven, meaning that the manuscript is bought first on its own merits, and then the artist is chosen for the project . . . even with picture books.

Self-publishing has grown to such an extent as to now be a viable option for authors. And artists might want to consider participating if the payments and rights are competitive and appropriate. Your time and talent have value. Few self-publishers can afford the price for art for a 32-page picture book on their own. But if they can, and you reach a fair agreement of terms, it might be a good practice project. Keep in mind there is less legal protection for the artist in these cases. Distribution is always a challenge, so the books may not get into bookstores or sell well. But the artist will have a published book to show off.

What fees or royalties can I expect for illustrating a children’s book?

The standard book royalty is 10 percent of the retail price of the book, shared between author and illustrator. It is normally a 50/50 split for picture books, unless the experience of one of the parties may be so much greater than the other that the royalty would be divided more equitably to reputation. For older-children’s books that include illustration and some board books, either a small percentage of the royalty is given to the illustrator or a flat fee is worked out. All payments to authors and illustrators are figured from projections made by the publisher indicating costs against the number of books the publisher believes they can sell. No offer is arbitrary. The range occurs because each book is projected differently with its own distinct costs and sales potential. These offers might be a bit negotiable.

The Graphic Artists Guild (90 John Street, Suite 403, New York, NY 10038) recommends certain fees for illustrations based on the market norms and averages for trade and mass market illustrated books. You can obtain from them their publication, The Graphic Artist Pricing and Ethical Guide Handbook, which holds a wealth of helpful industry information. These are ideal figure ranges from their thirteenth edition (fourteenth edition coming January 2013) from a random sampling, and the publishers may offer lower or higher fees than the Guild recommends.

Jacket (front only): $F–$3,000+ (flat fee)
Jacket + Interior Art (black-and-white): $2,500–$4,000 (flat fee or advance)
Picture Book Art Only: $3,000–$15,000+ (advance)
Picture Book Text and Art: $10,000–$60,000 (advance)

What should I know when signing a contract?

Do NEGOTIATE! It is professional and expected. Read the contracts carefully and ask if you do not understand the terminology. Many editors don’t understand all of their contracts, either! You may not be able to change anything, but don’t be intimidated about educating yourself. The purpose of contracts is to spell out expectations and legally protect both the publishers and the artists and writers. It should clearly explain the project, and the type and number of the pieces of art, sketch dates, finish dates, and payment schedules (1/3 at signing, sketch, and finish is typical). There will be legal talk about indemnity and such, and you need to read and understand all of this. Most is typical language. If you are uncomfortable, do find a contracts lawyer from the SCBWI or the Graphic Artists Guild.

» Flat Fees: You should be selling one-time reproduction rights only. If the publisher wishes to use the artwork again, he should pay for its use. (Exception: when art is being used in a publisher’s ads or catalog.) Ask for printed copies of the finished project . . . usually mass market and educational. (Though it is rare these days to get educational printed samples.)

» Royalty Agreements: Do not ask to retain subsidiary rights you cannot sell yourself. The publisher is set up to sell these rights that will financially benefit you and them, so let them do their job. Perhaps you may wish to limit the time frame of the unknown and future rights, such as for digital books, but most publishers frown on this. Simply make sure you receive a fair share of any income received from such sales (typically 25 percent or more on most sub rights). Take note of the royalty statement and payment clauses. Be sure the contract guarantees the safe return of your original artwork. It belongs to you and it has value separate from the printing of the book. The copyright is usually placed in your name for trade books. Be sure to ask for ten to fifteen free copies of all printed editions in the contract, and a reduced contributors’ ordering cost (normally 50 percent off).

» Educational Contracts and Market: Educational publishers produce books and supplemental projects for classrooms and library use. The programs include reading, social studies, math, science, music, art, etc. Different programs are updated in cyclical year patterns. Many illustrators find this is their bread-and-butter work. It belongs to you and it has value separate from the printing of the book. The copyright is usually placed in your name for trade books. Be sure to ask for ten to fifteen free copies of all printed editions in the contract, and a reduced contributors’ ordering cost (normally 50 percent off).

All of the preceding information, including pricing, generally pertains to photo-illustrating as well. The only additional hint would be to use signed model releases for any minor or adult included in your photography. This will protect you against invasion-of-privacy lawsuits and libel suits. You may want to be sure you allow for extra model and shooting costs as well.

What are ebooks, and how can I get into illustrating them?

Most ebooks (digitally enhanced books read on electronic devices) are not original at this point. Publishers are mostly reformatting backlists and classic books. Some enhancements might be added, but no new art is needed. Once backlists are done, publishers will be looking for new stories that may appear only as ebooks. Most likely these will often be offered as printed books as well, but the future will tell that tale. The field is in development. A big limiting factor is actually the devices themselves, as they need to advance further, and they are improving monthly. There is really no presentation guideline for these ideas at this time. A PDF dummy book as you might do with a printed book dummy is fine.

What are apps, and how can I get into this exciting new industry?

The moving target! As Emma D. Dryden (children’s editorial and publishing consultant with drydenbks) says, “Apps are not books. Nor are they ebooks . . . They are something else entirely, that require a great deal of complex production and design."

We are all asking good questions to which there are many convoluted, complex answers. It’s one answer one day, one publisher, and a very different one the next. It’s a time of exciting and expensive experimentation and rights battles in this industry. Artists should continue to watch and read. There are few paying opportunities in this field at this time, but that could change overnight. Again, the devices are limiting at this point . . . and the future will present possibilities. As Alex Knapp in a Forbes article mentioned recently, “We are at the dawn of the tablet era now.”

If you want to try to enter this area, you still need to start with a solid story line, just like any book, that includes “a plot, characters pacing, and an arc” (says Dryden). The best apps are like the best books: They engage and appeal to kids! It’s still all about the story before all the bells and whistles. Artists have an advantage in getting into this area, as it’s very visual. You will strive to expand and deepen the story experiences. To present an idea, work up a layered thumbnail visual dummy, just like a picture book dummy. You are not limited to a certain page count, but you must still keep the child and his interactivity with the story in the forefront of your imagination.
How can I learn more about illustrating children’s books?

Besides the traditional methods of training, such as local art schools and private consultations with local artists and critique groups, study the works of past and current illustrators. Note their use of color, form, space, and other visual elements. How do they solve the problems of technique, character development, and story pacing? There are many older books about writing and illustrating for the children's publishing market, and new ones are coming out all the time. There are many blogs by reps, writers, illustrators, and SCBWI regional advisors with a multitude of interviews, hints, and how-to articles. The industry and trends are constantly changing, but much of the information about illustrating remains age-old truths. Good art is good art. No way around that. Enjoy the partial list following of some of the wealth of information out there! And enjoy the journey.

As illustrator coordinator, new members who have a drive to make picture books often approach me for advice. There are as many paths to publication as there are artists. The article below will help kick start your art to go from hobby to creative career.

1) Admit it.
The first step is to tell everyone you know that you’re an artist. This is one of the hardest steps of all. Saying your dream out loud is scary. What if people laugh or don’t think you’re good enough? An accountant doesn’t worry if her friends think she is good at numbers. She does it because she likes working with numbers. You do art because you like doing it. If you want to do art, do it!!! Once YOU really start to think of yourself as an artist, you will be amazed how much quicker things begin to happen.

2) Community.
Surround yourself with other artists. It’s incredibly hard to do art in a vacuum. I cannot tell you how many horror stories I’ve heard from people who asked their mother/husband/wife/friend to critique their art. Love ones mean well, but their advice can sometimes do more harm than good. You need other artists to keep you focused, answer technical questions and, most important, motivate you. Nothing energizes me more as an artist than a night of talking art with a friend. You can do this by attending SCBWI events. (Please, please, please come to the events. We want as many people there as possible!!!) Join online groups on Facebook or Twitter. You need community! Even if your first step is contacting me, as illustrator coordinator I am happy to answer questions. I am easy to talk to, I promise!

3) Subject.
Two or three drawings are not enough of a foundation to show your work quite yet. You need more. And your drawings can’t just be a still life, a portrait smiling directly at the viewer, or an abstract. They should show some kind of narrative/story. As an illustrator you are clarifying what is happening in a story. A smiling portrait of your child/grandchild—no matter how nicely drawn—does not necessarily tell a story. If your drawings are just a well-drawn vase of flowers, you will need to show you can tell a story. Sketch. Sketch. Sketch. Draw five different scenes of the same fairy tale, three scenes of a Mother Goose rhyme, four scenes of what your pet does when everyone leaves, a story your child tells you. In a perfect world, you will show you can draw children, adults, senior citizens, and animals, and that you can draw the same character in different poses. And if you can do different nationalities, even better!

4) Choose.
Choose twelve sketches you like the most and execute them in black and white. This will help you understand the values in the composition and make your color illustration stronger. Plus, bonus if you have black and white pieces for your portfolio! You might not have time to do this for all your pieces, but consider doing a handful.

5) Execute your drawings in color.
As an artist you will always find fault with your pieces. Do them the best you can, learn from them, and then move to the next one. Be daring! If you feel you have perfected your talent at drawing a mouse, but someone needs a moose eating mousse instead, then by golly, draw that moose!

6) Displaying your portfolio.
Okay, now you have your portfolio! When I say portfolio I am referring to the collection of your work that represents your style, not necessarily an actual book. It’s important to get that portfolio online so people see it. The best way is to build a website. A Tumblr page will also work, and it’s a quick tool to use. Be careful not to fall into the trap of constantly telling yourself your portfolio will ready after the next piece. It’s easy to tell yourself your portfolio isn’t ready to avoid taking the somewhat scary next step.

7) Announce.
Choose your favorite piece and to make a postcard to send out.
Kristi Valiant has a great explanation of how to make and distribute promo cards. She says it better than I ever could. www.kristivaliant.blogspot.com/2012/11/sending-art-promotional-postcards-to.html

8) Rinse and Repeat.
Continue to make art and update your portfolio. Repeat Steps 3 to 7 as many times as it takes!

9) Relax.
This is a business where you will most likely receive rejections. This is normal and okay. It’s not a sign you shouldn’t be an artist. Not long ago, I was looking for a job. I had the normal job hunting experience. I sent out many, many resumes. I only heard back from a fraction of them. I had some interviews for jobs that I ended up not getting. Eventually, I landed a great job. When I didn’t hear back or was rejected from companies, I didn’t take it as a sign I should quit looking for a job, move into my parents basement, and eat Ramen noodles. I just kept sending out resumes until I got a new job. You need to give yourself the same permission to, for lack of a better term, fail in art. Remember everything happens outside of your comfort zone. Continue to be your own cheerleader. If you need a boost, send me an email and I will cheer you on! You can do this. I promise if you keep working toward the goal it will happen.

10) Look, a bird!
Yes, life is full of distractions. Stay focused. Persevere.

Good luck!!! 😊

1. Presentation Counts.

Before a person even looks at the artwork inside your portfolio they will encounter the portfolio itself. The outer case should reflect the same professionalism and style you present on the inside. It need not be fancy and frilly or sparkly and glittery. When I design my pieces I am always searching for the simple yet elegant solution to my compositional challenges, and I want my portfolio to reinforce that.

So, here’s what mine looks like . . .

The same manufacturer of this portfolio also makes available custom covers—so you have the option of creating your own unique design. But whatever you choose—be it sleek and black or wonderfully whimsical—make sure it suits your work.

2. Introduce Yourself.

Like a good strong handshake—a strong title card or introductory piece lets those opening your portfolio discern quite a bit about you. My advice? You don’t want to start off with a limp-fish handshake (i.e., a weak piece).

I prefer to add a title piece as the first page of my printed portfolio, rather than clutter up the rest of the pieces with my contact information. If you can swing it, I think it’s a good idea to have your “title” piece tie in with the rest of your promotional pieces. For instance, feature the same piece on your business card. That way, when someone who has met you (and has your card) opens your portfolio, they will immediately make the connection between the two.

Here’s one from 2010 as seen in my portfolio . . .

One of my favorite movies is The Three Amigos. In it, the Amigos (and the terrorized villagers of Santo Poco) are forced to stand up to the infamous El Guapo to save their homes. But how?

The Amigos ask “What is it this town really does well?” And then they use the extraordinary talent of the townspeople to save the day!

So, what does this have to do with putting together a prize winning portfolio?

Ask yourself what is it that you REALLY DO WELL! Not just OK, not PRETTY WELL. That thing . . . is what you need to put in your portfolio.

Are animals your thing, but people not so much? Then put in animals.

Are your illustrations of insects adorable? Go with bugs.

Is your black and white work so-so, but your color pieces are amazing? You know which way to go . . .

I’ve heard lots of people say that every children’s illustration portfolio should have a perfect balance of animals and people. Of adults and babies. I’ve even been given a list of barnyard animals that EVERY portfolio should contain. But in my opinion this, (pardon the upcoming pun), is hogwash. Not every artist draws every subject with consistency and grace.

Humility aside—one of my strong points is my line work. So, I like to showcase the working sketch of a piece opposite the finished piece.

Your portfolio should show what YOU do best.

4. Go with the Flow.

Just about as important as the quality of the pieces you show, is the order in which you show them. Remember that when art directors and editors look at your portfolio—they are thinking about how you tell a story visually. How you utilize page turns. Your sense of pacing and timing. Your design sensibilities. And this applies to your portfolio layout as much as it does to the individual pieces themselves.

Think about making the transitions between pieces flow naturally. Group pieces from the same project together. Pages that transition between one project and another? Consider creating a sense of flow with similar lines of action, or lighting, or color . . .

5. Less is More.

Aside from the lovely feel of my screw-post portfolio case, the other attribute that sold me on it was my ability to control the number of pages. Don’t you hate the feeling of turning to a blank page that’s just filler?

By controlling the number of pages, I also eliminate the urge to add that mediocre piece because I have an extra page to fill up. I truly believe that less is more when it comes to a printed portfolio. I limit it to twelve or thirteen pieces plus my title and end page. And speaking of end pages . . .

Just as the title page serves as your nice, firm, introductory handshake, a good end page is your: “It’s been lovely to meet you, we must do this again soon!” parting handshake.

Bottom line—make sure that from start to finish (and all the pages inbetween) your portfolio showcases the best of you!
Budding author/illustrators tend to get very nervous about putting together proper dummies. How many finished pieces should there be? Should it all be in color? How should it be bound? The key goal of a book dummy is to relay the idea of what the book could be—the vision.

Dianne Hess, executive editor of Scholastic Press said, “A book dummy shows that you have a sense of how your picture book will be paced. This can be achieved through a thirty-two-page sketch dummy.”

Some artists choose to make book dummies that are works of art unto themselves. They can be wonderful portfolio pieces, treasures to their creators and admirers. Although, from a submissions standpoint, Dianne feels that, “a full-color dummy with finished art is fun to look at, but totally unnecessary. And it’s a waste of your time, since even if the book does get sold, you will most likely still need to make some extensive changes—and you need to be flexible.”

As Meredith Mundy, executive editor of Sterling Children’s Books said, “Even if an author/illustrator says in the cover letter that he/she is fully willing to revise/reshape a project, when it looks done, it feels done. I’d much prefer to see a project in rough form and feel that the art director and editor will have a chance to work with the creator to shape a project to completion.”

My personal formula has been to pencil out the entire story and take two or three of the pieces to final. The wiggle room has been how finished those pencils are. I’ve recently loosened up, sometimes including enlargements of my thumbnail sketches to get the general ideas across.

Both Dianne and Meredith believe it’s important to share at least two finished pieces in a proposal to show what your final art will look like. Meredith said, “Even finished art unrelated to the proposed project is fine. What I’m really looking for is the finished style, since sketches don’t convey that well enough.”

Dianne said, “I have seen sketch dummies with very loose, rudimentary drawings that are just fine. But whether you are a new artist—or a veteran artist—it’s good to create a full sketch dummy. You don’t need refined sketches—just something loose. But enough to show placement, have some feeling of character development and page design, and logical movement of the story.”

Dummies don’t have to be hard to make. They don’t even have to be true to the book’s final intended size (although you can trim them down to the same proportions). They can be as simple as twenty pieces of regular paper or card stock stapled together at one end, or ten pieces of paper folded over and stapled in the middle. This will give you a full, standard-length, thirty-two-page picture book made up of forty facing sides from cover to cover, including the endpapers, title page, copyright page, and dedication page. To see how many pages need to be accounted for and where they go, you can download my thumbnails template at www.dulemba.com/FreeTools/storyboard, or look at a picture book you like and count it out.

Follow the same rule as your portfolio—never include original artwork in a dummy. Instead, scan your work into your computer and print it to each side of a page on your home printer. Staple it together and, voilà!

While you can find directions for hand-made books with sewn bindings and such online, Dianne says, “Fancy bindings are completely unnecessary. Staples are fine. Just make sure your pages are numbered.”

I do suggest getting one of those over-sized staplers that can reach all the way to the middle. I love mine. If you’re worried about sharp ends, put some masking or fabric tape over the spine.

If you do want to get fancy, you can lay your story out in printer spreads in InDesign, ready to fold into a proper book. Or a little bit of skill in Photoshop can go a long way if you’d like to format your pages there. You can have your local copy shop put it together or send your dummy off to Lulu.com for a seriously slick finish. But it’s really not necessary.

As Meredith said, “No need to provide anything super fancy—the simpler, the better.”

So, do dummies work? Do dummies sell books?

When I asked Dianne if she’d ever acquired a book because of a dummy, she said, “I can’t say how often—but I have bought many a book based on a dummy.”

Meredith has too. She said, “Twice that I can think of . . .

and one of those times, we didn’t even end up using the author as the illustrator! BUT the dummy showed very clearly the author’s vision for the book, and without it, I would not have looked twice at the very simple manuscript. It really did need visuals to clarify the concept."

Take note authors!

Creating book dummies isn’t just for illustrators. All creators can benefit from laying out their text in a page-turning format to see if the images/scenes are changing up, if there are any text dumps vs. spare verbiage spots, if the text fits the standard thirty-two-page layout, and if the story is working in general.

Bottom line, don’t let creating a picture book dummy scare you. As long as you have the page count right for a standard picture book, there are many different ways to get the point of your story across.
Creating the files

Essential tools for producing a digital dummy are:

1) a way to scan sketches and final art (if you work traditionally), to create digital files;
2) a way to add text to image files; and
3) a way to combine the resulting files into a multi-page pdf.

When scanning or having your images scanned, specify a file format other than jpeg, which compresses the information in the scan and re-compresses with every editing session, resulting in a progressive loss of quality. Bitmap or tiff formats are safer choices. A suggestion: scan and process at print resolution (300 pixels per inch) if possible. It’s a good idea to think of this as a print project from the start so that you retain as much information as possible in your native files—including converting color images to CMYK. That way you can use your digital dummy to produce a more polished print dummy if asked.

The easiest way to combine images and text into a multi-page pdf is with layout software such as Adobe InDesign. Set up your document to the dimensions of the finished page size, import scanned images, create text, and save. Once saved, you can export the document as a pdf. Be sure to check “Spreads” in the Export dialog window under Pages so that each panel of the pdf is a spread rather than a single page.

The next easiest method is to set up a spread-sized template in Photoshop or CorelDraw and proceed as above, dropping in art and adding text. The difference is that each saved spread will be a separate file. Name each pdf file to reflect the order in which you want the files seen: Dummy 1 for the cover image, Dummy 2 for the title page spread, etc. (There are excellent resources online that explore the many permutations of the standard 32-page picture book format. For dummy purposes, I generally disregard endpapers: page one is the title page, page two is designated for copyright information, and the story spans pages 3-32.) Once you have your spread files saved, you can use a pdf converter such as Adobe Acrobat Pro or one of its less costly clones (google “pdf converter software”) to combine the individual pdfs into one multi-page file.

For those of you who do not own one of the pricier image-editing programs, any simple utility—like Paint (part of the basic MS package for PC), or Paintbrush for Mac (not included with the basic operating system but available as a free add-on)—will allow you to size your images and add text. But they’re a bit clunky for the purpose of creating dummies. My Paint program will allow me to resize by percentage or by pixel dimension only (you must work out the math for yourself), and files cannot be saved directly as pdfs—you can either print to a pdf driver (when I experimented, this option added an arbitrary white border to my image), or use a pdf converter tool. It is also possible to find low-cost or free open source alternatives to Photoshop (GIMP is one)—and there’s Scribus as an alternative to InDesign. As with all the software mentioned in this article, research carefully before investing!

Don’t be seduced by fancy page-turn technology for your dummy. It’s very cool but unnecessary—and may even get in the way of the primary objective, which is to showcase your work. If this is a piece you want to put on your tablet to show off your mad skills to colleagues, however, there are free options (google “page-turn software”). Be sure to keep that pdf spread dummy in reserve for submissions.

Sizing the files

As a rule of thumb, try to get the size below 5 MB, in case you need to e-mail as an attachment. There are ways to play with pdf compression: start with “Smallest File Size” as the pdf Preset option in InDesign. (If you’ve already exported, you must open the original InDesign file and export again.) Experiment with different settings (renaming your file each time) to determine a workable balance between size and quality. If you’re using Photoshop to create spreads, choose “Low” or “Medium” Quality as your pdf option. You can also try the “Reduced-size pdf” option under “Save As Other” in Adobe Acrobat Pro’s drop-down “File” menu.

Some tips:

» Always check “Optimize for fast web view,” which controls how your file will load.
» Choosing the highest available version of Acrobat in the “Compatibility” menu can have a dramatic effect on file size—just be sure the person viewing has upgraded to the latest version of Adobe Reader.
» Standard screen resolution is 72 ppi. You can down-sample your images to this resolution without worry for on-screen viewing.
» If you’ve created your dummy at full print size—say, 11” x 9” page size—try scaling down proportionately: resize pages to 8.25” x 6.75” (75%) or 5.5” x 4.5” (50%).
» If you’re including finished color art samples, consider storing and sending them as separate files to keep your dummy in grayscale.

Storing the files

A Wordpress website will allow you to upload a pdf to your media library. Once uploaded, the file will have its own url which you can use to link internally to a password-protected page on your site or externally, in an e-mail. If you own a Blogger or Tumblr site, you must store your file on a server or a free publishing site such as Scribd or Issuu (be sure your settings are set to “private”). Resist the temptation to embed the dummy with a third-party reader, however. Most of these utilities employ Flash, which is no longer supported for iPhone, iPad or Android.

If you’re concerned only with viewing the dummy on your own device, you can store your files on your laptop or desktop and sync to your tablet or phone.

Delivering the files

The safest option when querying is to provide a link. Submission requirements vary, so research your intended targets, and when in doubt, ask. Although e-mail hosts are continually upgrading their storage limits, never attach a pdf dummy file to an e-mail without permission.
As a dedicated illustrator, focused on getting that first book deal, no doubt you’ve worked hard—practicing and experimenting with your art, discovering and finessing your unique style, making connections in the children’s book community, polishing your portfolio/website, and soaking up all you can at conferences and workshops.

So much energy and work is put into preparing one’s craft. But often when an illustrator is hired to create the art for a picture book, it can be a bit of a surprise what comes next.

Almost without exception, when I work with an illustrator on her or his first picture book, there’s a learning curve for the artist on the process and nitty-gritty of how a book comes together. Often, getting up-to-speed on those details slows the whole process, can cause confusion, waste time and effort, and be stressful for the illustrator trying to navigate the whole thing. So, here, I’d like to demystify some of the process so you can be better prepared for the happy day you are hired to illustrate your first book.

By no means do I cover all the things that could come up, but this list can certainly give you a head start when you get that call.

THE MANUSCRIPT

Most first-time illustrators are creating the art for a manuscript written by someone else. While it certainly does happen that a first-time illustrator is also the author of her or his first book, it’s quite rare. Illustrating a book that’s written by another is a fantastic way to get into the children’s book world (and the usual way.) Even more than that, many top illustrators only create art for books they haven’t written. Not all illustrators are writers—that’s a very individual thing based on one’s interest, skills, and talents. However, anything is possible!

So, let’s say you are hired to illustrate a manuscript by someone else (that the publisher has acquired.) There are certain things you should consider. Of course, your art director (or, in some cases, editor) will be there to help you, but it pays to be informed so you can know your options.

PAGINATION:

Some art directors will give the illustrator a manuscript that has all the page breaks inserted throughout, so it’s clear what text falls on which page. But often the text is presented as one flowing story, so it’s left to the artist to decide the pacing of the text in relation to the art. In this case the freedom—and responsibility—is for the illustrator to choose which scenes get the most emphasis in the arc of the story.

As a first-time illustrator, it might be best to ask for the manuscript to be paginated for you. It may come that way first, but if not, feel free to ask for the page breaks to be inserted by the author and editor. That could help avoid much confusion.

AUTHOR’S ART NOTES:

Many picture book authors, with the best intentions, will add illustration notes throughout their manuscripts. Often it’s for the editor to better understand the story, which can help with the editing process. But many times these art notes are left in the manuscript that is given to the art director to then send to the illustrator.

Unless an art note is essential for the artist to understand (for example: a major aspect of the story that’s not mentioned in the text), I always take out the art notes when giving an illustrator the manuscript. A picture book is a shared and equal creation of both the author and illustrator (and, by extension, the editor and art director). We hire the best illustrators for their unique and singular vision, for how they would interpret a story. I feel that, by art directing an illustrator right away, it’s like putting handcuffs on that artist—I want to see what you will bring to the illustrations, not how you would draw my ideas, or the author’s.

For various reasons, many art directors and editors will leave the author’s art notes in a manuscript that may come to you. You should absolutely feel free to talk with your art director and ask for them to be taken out or, at the very least, discuss that you would like the freedom to draw what you envision without those restraints.

The Big Exception: non-fiction. With non-fiction, the author has probably spent years researching the topic and, since the art must factually reflect the topic, art notes are often needed. In fact, the author’s notes will be a treasure trove of resources for you and you may want even more information from the author as you do your sketches.
CHARACTER DESIGN

Sometimes, and understandably, a first-time illustrator will be so eager to jump into the story sketches that she or he will submit the whole book sketches before refining the main character design. While that can be fine, it could create even more work for the illustrator (and take valuable time) to re-sketch each page if the character designs change.

Most all picture books are character based, and experimenting with the character visually will not only inform how you illustrate the world you are creating for them, but is also a lot of fun. I always ask illustrators to go wild—try out all sorts of designs. Who is this person or animal (or object . . .)? What do they show about their character on the outside and how can the design hint at who they are on the inside? Do they share the same design qualities as their environment or are they different from their surroundings? Etc.

Once you and the art director are satisfied that you’ve created THE character the story calls for, then you can jump into the full book.

TYPE DUMMY

The type design of a book, which is the designer at the publishing house’s responsibility and expertise, certainly isn’t decided upon at the start of the illustration process. But, as the artist, it’s essential to know how much room to leave for the text on each page. So, if it’s not provided for you at the start, be sure to ask for a type dummy: this is a rough layout of the book, set at the actual size and dimensions of the pages, with the type placed on each page at the size it will be in the final book. By no means will the fonts be final or the text finessed (it’s usually from an un-copyedited version of the manuscript), but it will help you to know how much room is needed to accommodate the text.

Of course, just like the art, the type design will evolve over the course of the book creation. In fact, when I design a book, I wait until the final art is done to decide upon the fonts and final design of the text—like in jazz, I “riff” off of the art style, color palettes, emotions, etc. The book designer’s expertise is in incorporating the type into the art in an organic way, all the while knowing the parameters and “rules” of design.

But if you have the basic idea of how to use the sized text blocks in your initial compositions, you’ll be ahead of the game.

DELIVERY OF FINAL ART

No matter how you create art, what media you use, and however you will deliver the final illustrations, knowing certain things up front will save you much potential hassle and headache. In more instances than I’d like to admit, both the illustrator on a project and I have both assumed we were understanding how the art would be created. But, when the final art was delivered, we both were in for a shock. Art is scanned and printed in specific ways, and crafting your physical artwork and/or setting up your digital files in the right ways from the beginning is essential.

TRADITIONAL MEDIA (NON-DIGITAL):

Because of where we are with technology now, illustrators have a wonderful freedom to create picture book art using whichever media is right for the artist and best suited for the story. From paint to cut paper to collage to pastel to a combination, as well as so many other media, scanning or photographing art for the printed page has jumped leaps and bounds from where it was years ago. We can now reproduce all kinds of media beautifully.

However, there are still parameters to consider.

Most art is scanned on a flatbed scanner, which is good news, since the art board can be rigid. (If you’ve heard of a drum scanner, which is no longer used to my knowledge, you’ll understand why this is a marvelous thing.) But the size of the scanner needs to be considered. Be sure to ask your art director if there is a size limit to the art you should produce.

In four-color press printing (cyan, magenta, yellow, and black), certain colors simply won’t reproduce. Above all, neon colors won’t print like they look in original art, so when you create your first color piece, perhaps send it to your art director before you jump into the rest of the art to be sure your color palette will reproduce the way you want it to.

DIGITAL MEDIA:

Since the way color looks on your computer screen will inevitably look different from how it looks on an art director’s screen—and it will definitely look different on the printing press—choosing your color palette can be tricky. The best way to avoid surprises is, as soon as you’ve done your first few color pieces, send the files to the publisher for test proofs. They will make printed proofs of your art files that look as they will when printed. Then you can see how the colors will actually look and adjust your digital palettes accordingly to create the rest of the art.

Also—and this is important—the final art files need to be delivered in CMYK, not RGB. All books are printed using CMYK. So, as you create the art, I recommend doing it in CMYK from the start. If you spend your time creating your lovely art with RGB colors, you may then have to spend rushed and needless hours reworking the art once you convert the files into CMYK.

Also, discuss the file specifications before you start. Art files usually need to be 300 dpi at 100% of print size, but confirming this first is essential.

ABOVE ALL:

NEVER BE SHY ABOUT ASKING QUESTIONS. Honesty is the best practice—once you are hired to illustrate a book, you’re in! So don’t be afraid to ask every possible question you can think of, or even to say you don’t understand the process yet. Believe me, open communication is always appreciated and can save everyone time and stress.

Your first book should be a joy, and the more tools you have at the beginning, and the better relationship you have with your art director, the better the book will be!
Where should I send my writing?

It may be difficult to think about your manuscript from the other side of the desk, but do so for a moment and the process may seem a little less overwhelming. Editors need to discover new talent, and indeed, it’s what makes their job exciting. With this in mind, you have a real shot at finding a home for your manuscript. It does, however, take some serious work. Unfortunately, many people believe that writing is easy. These same people do not realize that their text goes off into the world alone and must withstand the tests of a variety of readers and tastes as well as changing trends. In light of these demands, it is encouraging that so many manuscripts do find their niche.

The match between the kind of project you’ve written and the house/editor to whom you send it is important. You may receive a response that says your project is “not right for our list.” For some editors, that may simply be a kind way of saying no. For others, it is true—your specific project does not work for them because they do not edit picture books, or nonfiction, or whatever genre you have submitted. No matter how good your manuscript is, you won’t get on that list. One thing many authors should know, however, is that if there is some element in a project that strikes the editor as inventive or well written, he or she may take the time to write an encouraging note even if the work is declined. You may have written a work that will, in fact, appeal to only a limited readership; it may not be appropriate for wide distribution. This should not deter you, but should help you put in perspective the enormous task ahead. Now let’s assume you are willing and ready to seek the widest recognition possible and form a relationship with a publisher.

Begin to think about where to send your work and develop a plan of action. Some questions to answer: What are you selling? Fiction or nonfiction? A picture book? A middle grade or young adult novel? There are some general rules for picture book submissions. Do not send a text that is equivalent to a greeting card, or send one that is so long it cannot possibly fit the standard thirty-two-page picture book format. Do your research. Never assume your book is for all ages. An editor as well as a bookseller or librarian needs to place the book in some category. Who is really the best reader for your work? Of course, a book can cross over and appeal to other groups, but you should understand that it needs to start in some specific category. Once you know what kind of book you have written, it will be easier to focus.

The SCBWI’s “Publishers of Books for Young Readers” list (page 49) is updated annually and is a good place to begin your research. In addition, the SCBWI’s “Edited By” list (page 71) will help you research specific editors’ tastes and the types of manuscripts for which they look.

Another valuable resource is the Children’s Book Council (CBC), a nonprofit organization of the children’s book industry. The CBC maintains a list of publishers who are committed to publishing books for young people. See their website, www.cbcbooks.org, for more information.

Literary Market Place (LMP) is another source for a list of publishers; it also lists literary agents. It is available at any reference desk at public libraries across the country and is updated annually.

Although the CBC and LMP are important sources for you to use, your real work is more complex. You need to determine whether there is a publisher who is currently publishing titles in the vein of your work. This seems obvious—send a picture book to any children’s publisher, because they all publish picture books, right? Not really. A better approach is to try to figure out exactly what you’ve got. If you have a holiday story, try to figure out who might have a subcategory of holiday titles. If you don’t see any general trend, then you need to visit a bookstore and really look at what is similar to your work and check who the publisher is. Be certain to find the exact imprint and not just the overall corporate name. Many large publishers are umbrellas for smaller imprints. Each imprint has its own staff and its own mission. You can see this for yourself by visiting various publishers’ websites. These sites will list each imprint, with examples of exactly the type of books each one publishes. It may seem to you at first glance that all the imprints are essentially the same, but they are not. Within the large houses especially, the identity each imprint has is important.

This distinction, however, leads to another rule: Decide which imprint/editor you are writing to, and do not send your submission to someone else in that group at the same time. Once you have your list of publishers and specific imprints, find out whether unsolicited manuscripts are being accepted. Post-9/11, many houses determined that for security reasons they would return manuscripts addressed simply to “The Editors,” without a specific name attached. This may make you feel as if it’s even harder to find a home for your work, but understand that from the publisher’s side, security measures are not unreasonable. Your research should include finding the names of editors to whom you should submit your work. This security policy applies to many literary agencies as well. It is up to you to find out each recipient’s requirements.
How do you discover which agents and editors will accept unsolicited submissions?

No need to hire Sherlock Holmes. The SCBWI has conferences across the country (and throughout the world). Find out about editors who are speaking, even if you do not attend their sessions. Another way to keep up with editors and who might be working where is to read Publishers Weekly (PW), which should also be available at your library and is even sold in some of the larger bookstores. Twice a year, in February and July, PW has ads, interviews, reviews, and general coverage of trends and issues in children’s books. Some people feel that submitting a manuscript is as anxiety-provoking as applying to college. And in some ways the two are alike! There are plenty of places that could be a perfect match for your manuscript, but not all of them will work out. Nonetheless, like any teenager applying to college, you need to put time and energy into the process so that your manuscript finds a home.

Should I register my work with the US Copyright Office before I send it to a publisher?

The copyright law states that work is copyrighted as soon as it exists in tangible form, so there is no need to register it before mailing it out. Once the work is published, the publisher will file the necessary forms with the Copyright Office at Library of Congress to register your work.

The news in Publisher’s Corner is informative, but it can also be dismaying. How can any manuscript, no matter how good, hope to make it out of such a huge slush pile?

If a house has an open-door policy, then submitting your work is worth it. Try to send the project to a specific editor by name. Also, contests are a good bet because the house running the contest wants to find a winner. That is why they bother to run the contest.

A friend and I wish to collaborate on a picture book. One of us is a writer, the other an illustrator. We both know it is not advisable to send a manuscript with proposed artwork unless you are the author and illustrator. Yet we do see books done by teams. Both of us are published, but neither of us is well known. How best to propose such a book?

Realistically, it is best for the author to send in a text, and if this is accepted, the author can suggest the possibility of using the artist he or she knows. However, do not expect that this will be an accepted match. If you do send the project along as a team, you have a smaller chance of acceptance—although it is possible.

What is the best procedure regarding picture book manuscripts?

Should I send the manuscript only, or make up a layout by preplanning the actual pages as they will appear in the book, leaving blanks where the art will go?

Most editors can imagine the possible visuals for a picture book text, so it is unnecessary to lay out the book. A double-spaced manuscript is preferable. Remember, part of an editor’s job is to work with the art director to create a vision for the final book. Type the manuscript and leave extra space where page breaks fall. The editor who acquires your book will be able to envision as he or she reads the text.

I’ve sold a story to a magazine. Is it all right to try to get it published in book form as well?

Usually yes, but this always depends on the rights the magazine has purchased. If the magazine has bought nonexclusive serial rights and agrees to return the rights to you after publication, then the story is yours to do with as you wish once the rights have reverted to you. However, some magazines buy exclusive rights in perpetuity. Check your agreement with the magazine before going on to submit the work to a book publisher.

Do I really need a cover letter when I submit my manuscript?

What difference does it make if I’ve included an SASE?

An editor gets many submissions. Your cover letter is a way for you to pitch the project so that the editor gets a taste of what to expect. Don’t concentrate on selling yourself as much as succinctly letting the editor know about what he or she will be reading. Short and to the point is best; not more than one page should do. If you have published books, you should mention that and list the titles.

Isn’t it true that a word-processed manuscript set in type to look like a book will catch an editor’s eye and make him more likely to buy it?

No. This is unnecessary and can be off-putting. Send a double-spaced text with one-inch margins all around. Anything else is a waste of effort.

I sent my manuscript off and waited a year for an answer. It came with a form rejection letter. This time I’m sending it out to five different publishers at once. I can’t afford to have my work sitting around in an editor’s office for a year. I want to get published!

You have every right to submit to anyone you’d like to send your work to; however, you should say in your cover letter that it is a multiple submission. You should also check to be certain that you are submitting to only one editor at an imprint. Do not submit to more than one person at an imprint. Editors find this annoying.

The following procedure is fair to you and the editor and recommended by the SCBWI:

Send a copy of your manuscript and say in your letter that you are doing so.

If you haven’t heard within two months, write the editor a friendly note (do not telephone or fax) asking whether she’s made a decision. Editors find telephone calls annoying and intrusive, taking them away from the work on their desks. Editors also do not personally keep track of all the unsolicited material that comes in and cannot answer telephone inquiries about the status of a writer’s manuscript; letters are much better. (It’s a good idea to enclose a self-addressed postcard; the editor can jot a note on it and return it to you quickly.) If the editor says the manuscript is having a second reading, or she’d like more time with it, grant her another month or two before you write again.

If you hear nothing at all during the three months your manuscript is with the editor, write again, stating that you are withdrawing the manuscript from consideration.

Most editors, agents, and the SCBWI believe it’s best to send one manuscript to one publisher at a time. It is strongly advised that writers not send more than one manuscript to a publisher at the same time. Save the second one to offer after the first one has been declined—or, more happily, bought.

Will I have better luck with an agent? How do I go about finding one?

It is not necessary to have an agent if you do your research and submit to a house that has an open policy, or if you learn of an editor and write directly to that person. However, an agent is the person whose business it is to have contacts in the publishing industry. What an agent might do is match your work with an appropriate editor more quickly. However, it is difficult to make agent connections, and the process takes time.

The “Agents Directory” on page 129 of this guide is a listing of agents and artists’ representatives. Once you’ve selected a few agents to write to, send one of them a query letter (with an SASE) outlining your writing history and a sample of your work. Do not submit your work simultaneously to several agents, even though you may need to query several before you find one willing to take you on and with whom you will feel comfortable working. Most agents will not charge you a reading fee or ask you to sign a contract with them or charge you for incidental expenses such as telephone calls and messengers; some agents, however, have instituted such practices.

After you’ve published a number of books, you may find an agent a great help in negotiating better terms and relieving you of concern about various business details. In short, there are arguments for and against new writers having an agent, and the final decision rests with you.

Several publishers have turned down my book. Should I pay to have it published?

This is a decision only you can make. Self-publishing has its place: as a gift for the family, to make a controversial political statement, or to put forward an unconventional point of view. But as a means of selling your book, it falls far short of what a commercial publisher can do. Most libraries and schools won’t even consider purchasing a self-published book for children. Today, technological advances do make it possible to self-publish. The issues after creating the actual printed volume arise in terms of distribution and publicity. It is a big job to do alone; however, the choice is yours. Sometimes it is satisfying enough to print your book and share it with those you most care about. ☺️
One of the primary goals of the SCBWI is to bring writers, illustrators, and others in the children’s book field together. We very much appreciate your interest in helping to start a critique group and we want you to know that the national organization is ready to help you in any way we can.

GETTING STARTED
Before you start looking outward, carefully reflect on the kind of critique group you’d like to belong to by asking yourself the following questions:

» Do you prefer to mingle exclusively with others in your genre or field, or are you open to mixing (e.g., picture book writers only; all children’s writers, novelists and picture book writers alike; writers only; or writers and illustrators)?
» How prolific/productive are you, and how often do you need feedback from your peers?
» How do you handle comments from colleagues? Are you able to listen to criticism without getting defensive? Is it easy for you to tune out comments you disagree with and stick with your intuition? Are you willing to give others’ suggestions a try, even if at first you disagree?
» Do you feel more comfortable with others at your same level, or are you more inspired when you work with people across levels of experience?

How you answer these questions will give you an idea of the kind of group you’ll want to find—one that will be most successful for you. While it’s not always a breeze finding the perfect group, being clear with what you’re looking for will help you stay focused in your search.

FINDING YOUR GROUP
The process of finding or starting a critique group can often be just like finding one’s soul mate—and often equally daunting. But before you start crafting that personal ad to post on Craigslist, there are other routes to consider first:

» Established groups. The SCBWI is a matchmaker of sorts. Contact your chapter’s regional advisor or check your regional page at scbwi.org to inquire about critique group opportunities in your area. The SCBWI can’t force a critique group to accept you as a new member, of course, but we may be able to match you with one or more possibilities.
» SCBWI activities. Hang out where others with similar interests will be: Check out the SCBWI website and the Bulletin for a comprehensive list of conferences and happenings geared exclusively for writers and illustrators of children’s books.
» Writing classes and events. Also be on the lookout for various classes that are offered in your community via libraries, universities, community colleges, and other professional organizations. Critique groups regularly launch from these kinds of activities.
» Blogs and social networking sites. Facebook, Twitter, and other social networking platforms have opened up a whole new world to the children’s book community, and critique groups have sprung up as a result of how easy it is to connect and share work electronically. Children’s writer and podcaster Tony Dirksen recently advertised his cyber-critique group’s search for another writer by making a comment on other writers’ blogs and on Meetup.com. It paid off, too! Tony connected with two great writers and is thrilled about his new group. Using online tools to find a critique group allows all parties to be completely honest about what they’re looking for—in terms of commitment level, experience, feedback needs, and relationship style.

RULES OF ENGAGEMENT
If you’re starting a brand-new critique group, or as you fold into an existing group, you’ll have some decisions to make together. Talking through each person’s expectations, goals, and styles at the onset will help ensure you’re all on the same page. Here are some things you’ll want to discuss:

» How regularly do you want to meet? Weekly, biweekly, monthly, or as needed?
» Where? In person at a home, library, or café, or online?
STARTING A CRITIQUE GROUP

» Will you include refreshments and food, or are you there strictly for critique?
» How will you share costs for guest speakers, snacks, or celebrations?
» If you’re critiquing one another’s novels, are you comfortable reading an entire manuscript, or would you prefer to bring individual scenes for critique?
» How do you prefer to review one another’s work—in advance by e-mail, or on the spot while read aloud at your meeting?
» Will the writer read his or her own work aloud or have someone else do the honors?
» Will the writer provide photocopies for each group member?
» How will you comment on one another’s work—taking turns or letting the feedback flow freely as inspired?
» What will be the group’s size and how will you bring in new members (or will you not)?

SEARCHING SUGGESTIONS

Regardless of how you go about finding your critique group, there are a few important things to remember about the process.

» Be proactive and dedicated in your search. Finding the right critique group can take a long time, so don’t expect it to come together overnight—or even after a meeting or two.
» Remember successful critique groups come in many shapes and forms. In-person meetings work really well for some, while online groups are great for others—especially when spread across geographies.
» Even in the best of critique groups, dynamics can change and members may end up going their separate ways. Remember that there are just as many critique groups as there are fish in the sea. Keep at it!

KEEPING IT REAL

Once you find the right critique group, cherish it. First and foremost, respect the work and privacy of your peers. When critiquing, sandwich constructive feedback with praise. When being critiqued, listen and take notes without being defensive.

For more information about nurturing a successful critique group, be sure to read Linda Sue Park’s “Give and Take of Critique” on page 33. Ursula K. Le Guin’s Steering the Craft is another excellent resource, with an appendix devoted to successful peer groups.

Finally, be sure to keep us posted! Let the SCBWI know about publication successes by sending a note to people@scbwi.org, as well as to your chapter’s regional advisor or newsletter editor. Good news is for sharing! 😊

WHY I LOVE MY CRITIQUE GROUP

by Kristin Venuti

We call ourselves the Scribbling Siblings, despite having been born on different continents and into different generations.

We have two important things in common. The first is a drive to become the best writers we can. The second is we all hate black licorice. Which I suppose seems a little irrelevant, but it’s a good jumping-off place for critique.

“I like this treatise on lawn care more than I like black licorice.”

“Hmm, this description misses the mark. It puts me in mind of black licorice.”

I joke, but from the beginning, we agreed to be kind but very, very candid during critique. That was a decade ago, and in the years since, we’ve built up an incredible trust.

I love it that:

» the Scribbling Siblings take time to thoroughly read what I’ve written. We send our pieces out a week in advance. This allows us freedom to dig deep.
» critiques are confined to the writing. Knowing it’s about the writing and not about the writer allows each of us to be less defensive.
» the drive to improve far outpaces the desire to simply hear our work praised. I truly count on the group to help me identify weaknesses in what I’ve written. This is the only way I can work to overcome them.
» we adhere strictly to the Rule of Twenty Minutes. Usually, about ten will be spent in reading aloud and ten will be spent in discussion. If someone wants more discussion time, they’ll skip the reading aloud, or vice versa. When the alarm goes off, it’s the next person’s turn. End of story.

Of course, great friendship has cropped up, as it will when five people have been meeting weekly for ten years. All non–critique specific conversations (and this includes anti–black licorice tirades) take place after the last alarm goes off, and not until then. 😊
For most writers, critique is a crucial part of the writing process. If you have any experience with critiques, you already know that some critiques are more helpful than others. Here are some guidelines for giving and receiving successful critiques.

THE PLAY
Whether your work is being critiqued by a group or one other reader (online or in real life), the first rule of thumb should be this: The writer does not speak during the comments phase of the critique session. Not once. Not a single word.

Why not? Because the work must stand or fall on its own. When the piece eventually gets submitted and is read by an editor, the writer won’t be there to say things like, “Well, what I meant there is . . .” or “That’s supposed to refer back to . . .” The writer should listen, take notes, and listen some more. Later, when all the commenters are finished, there can be discussion including the writer. But not at first.

Some groups or partners exchange work in advance. Others read on the spot. Both systems have their advantages, but for in-depth critiquing, reading the piece in advance and spending time on it before the meeting is invaluable.

GIVING
The method I like best is often referred to as “the sandwich.” A commenter begins by saying something he/she likes about the piece, then goes on to point out weaknesses, and finishes up with another positive comment—sandwiching the negative between two positives. When a writer hears something good first, he/she is more likely to be open-minded about the criticisms. And finishing with a positive point keeps the critique friendly.

Just as the writer should abide by the rule of not speaking during the critique, the commenters should abide by the sandwich rule. Everyone should offer both positive and critical comments on the piece. I can’t count the number of times a writer has said to me, “My critique group always praises my work. That makes me feel good, but I end up not knowing how it can be improved.” Once in a blue moon, maybe someone does offer a perfect or near-perfect piece for critique. But 99.99 percent of the time, a good critiquer will be able to offer helpful comments for improvement.

Conversely, people sometimes feel that a commenter has torn apart their work and has absolutely nothing good to say about it. These critiques are depressing at best and downright hurtful at worst. The sandwich method helps avoid either pitfall.

Exactly what are you looking for when you are reading someone else’s work? It varies, of course, depending on the genre. Although every piece is different, the following give a general blueprint for what a critiquer should be looking for:

Plot
» Page turnability: Is the story interesting? Does it make you want to read on? Do you ever feel impatient and wish things would get going?
» Problem: Does the main character have a clearly delineated problem confronting him/her? Does each scene develop either impediments to a solution or progress toward a solution?
» Logic: Do the scenes connect in a logical manner? Is there something happening in the middle or at the end of the piece that simply doesn’t make sense given the setup?
» Ending: “Unexpected inevitability”—has the writer laid the groundwork for the ending, even if it’s a twist or surprise?

Character
» Believability: Do the characters seem real? Do they talk and act like people you might know—even if they’re hedgehogs? Do they have flaws, or are they too perfect? Do they have characteristics, quirks, idiosyncrasies that increase their individuality, or are they generic?
» Empathy: Do you care about the characters? Do you feel anxious for them as they face their problem? Do you feel like cheering wildly or at least smiling if/when they finally solve it?
» Growth: Has the character grown or changed in some way by the end of the story?
Writing

An article of this length cannot, of course, cover all the writing points that a good critiquer should be on the alert for. But they can be put into a single concept: invisibility. Is the writing “invisible”? In other words, is the story so compelling and well written that the technique simply disappears? Or are you stopping as you read and thinking things like, That sentence is awkward, or, That’s three paragraphs in a row of solid description—it’s getting boring? Critiquers should note wherever the writing pulled them out of the story.

It may seem ironic, but the goal is to help the writer achieve invisibility in his/her technique so that what shines is not individual words or phrases, but the story itself.

One more point: In my opinion, critique groups are not the place for heavy line editing. If a piece is riddled with grammatical errors, it is tedious and difficult to point out these errors in a group setting. Such work is best done one-on-one, with an editing partner. The best a group can do in such cases is to point out to the writer that he/she has this weakness.

Taking

The importance of listening when receiving a critique cannot be overstated. Coupled with this is the difficult task of not taking a critique personally. When a trusted commenter says, “This scene doesn’t work for me,” or, “I really don’t think you need this paragraph here” (and be forewarned! It will always be your very favorite paragraph!), he/she is not saying, “You are a bad writer.” Good critiques focus on the writing, not the writer.

Let’s assume that the commenters have finished their “sandwiches” and the writer is now allowed to join in the discussion. Where possible, the writer should pose his/her responses as questions. Example: “Ann, you said this scene on page four is unclear to you. Would you say that’s due to characterization or scene-setting?” The writer should avoid making statements: “The scene on page four is a continuation of what happened on page two, but I had to stop there to explain Grandma’s will.” As a writer who presumably wants comments on your work, your job now is to receive responses and information—not to give them.

Once the writer is back home with a stack of scribbled-on manuscripts and perhaps a pad of notes, the real work begins. People differ greatly on how they work with critique comments, but here is the method I like best.

First, I sort the comments. I suppose this could be done in your head, but I actually make a list. Three columns at the top of a page: Yes / Maybe / No No No! I put brief notes under each heading based on the comments I received. Then I start revising. I start with the Yes column—the comments I love. You know what I mean—when someone says something and you think, “Eureka! That’s perfect! Why didn’t I think of that? Thankyouthankyouthankyou!” I make those changes first.

Then I stop and think. A lot. This phase takes the longest. I think about the other two columns—especially about the items under No No No! If enough time goes by, my wounded feelings about those negative comments subside and I’m able to be much more objective about them—rather than dismissing them emotionally.

Here are a couple of examples of how helpful this can be—one from each side of the fence. In one of my middle grade novels, a character dies at the end. My critique partner thought the way he died didn’t work at all. She told me so and made an alternative suggestion. I was utterly dismayed. This was my ending—the climax of the book! How could she say such a thing!? I let a few days go by and I decided to prove her wrong. I would write the scene her way just to show her how it couldn’t possibly work. I’m sure you can guess what happened. The scene ended up being similar to what she had suggested, although not exactly the same—because in trying to work out her suggestion, I stumbled onto something even better. This never would have happened had I dismissed her suggestion outright.

In another instance, my partner gave me a middle-grade of about 25,000 words to read. I read it and loved it—but I told her that it was not complete. Where she had ended the book was not the end of the story. I can well imagine her dismay in this case—here she thought she had finally finished, and now I was telling her no? She thought about it for a while, then wrote a little more just to see where it would take her. She ended up with 37,000 words—and a beautiful story that feels truly complete. Now she finds it hard to believe she ever thought it finished initially.

I won’t deny that it’s a real balancing act, trying to decide which suggestions to heed and which to ignore, but believe me, it gets easier as you learn to trust your partners and gain confidence in your writing.

Ready to Submit?

A critique group or partner should help you answer this question: Is a piece ready to submit? Here is my rule of thumb: A piece is ready to submit when it’s one of the best things I’ve ever read. It’s so good, I can’t wait for my partner to send it out. I want to tell everyone about this wonderful story I’ve read!

How often do you feel that way? The truth is, not very often. And that’s the way it should be. Editors say things like, “Read a thousand books in your genre. Compare your story to theirs. If it’s as good as the very best of what you’ve read, it’s ready to submit.” (Can you imagine how much smaller slush piles would be if we all felt this way about our work and our partners’ work? Editors might even have time to write real rejection letters instead of sending forms!) Not “This is such a sweet story. My kid’s class loved it when I read it to them.” Not “I can’t believe that book got published. Mine is much better.”

No—the response of your crit partners and yourself should be, “This is one of the best things I’ve ever read.” Yes, it sounds like a tall order. But whether you’re a new writer trying to break in or a published author trying your hand at a different genre, that’s the standard you must achieve. And a critique group or partner you trust can help get you there.
TYPES OF PUBLISHERS

Here is a brief overview of the types of publishers and what you can expect when they say “We want to publish your book.” Above all, when any publisher offers you a contract, know what kind of publisher you are dealing with, and don’t be afraid to ask questions.

TRADITIONAL TRADE PUBLISHERS

Traditional publishers contract with an author, ideally offering an advance against royalties. A few traditional publishers offer a flat fee only. Smaller publishers might offer a royalty without advance. Whether the terms are an advance against royalties or a flat fee, the author owns the copyright and his/her name is on the book. Other terms of a traditional publishing contract may vary. Trade books are marketed by publishers’ sales representatives and wholesalers to bookstores, libraries, and schools, and are reviewed in dedicated book media such as Publishers Weekly, School Library Journal, Horn Book, Booklist, Kirkus Reviews, and reviewed and/or synopsized in bookstore newsletters.

MASS MARKET PUBLISHERS

Mass market publishers offer similar contracts to trade publishers, though sometimes the copyright may be in the publisher’s name or a joint copyright. Mass market books are handled by publishers’ sales representatives and wholesalers and are stocked primarily by bookstores and discount retailers, such as Target and Kmart. These books receive reviews in some of the dedicated media.

BOOK PACKAGERS

Packagers or book developers generate story and series concepts, which they sell to traditional and mass market publishers, then find writers and illustrators to produce the work. Their contracts range from offering an advance against royalty to a flat fee. Copyright is sometimes joint, but is often in the packager’s name alone. Sometimes the author’s name is on the book; sometimes it’s not. Distribution depends on the publisher, and reviews depend on the market for the book.

SMALL PRESSES

Some small presses publish books for young readers. Smaller publishers generally produce fewer titles and may offer a contract with advance against royalties, a royalty-only contract, or a flat fee contract. Review media occasionally cover small press books, and distribution is usually through direct mail catalogs and/or wholesalers.

EDUCATIONAL PUBLISHERS

Educational publishers publish curriculum-related material geared for use primarily in schools. Contracts may include an advance against royalties, a royalty only, or a flat fee only. Marketing is generally accomplished through a force of sales representatives who present the material to educators (in their offices/schools and at conferences) and educational supply stores throughout the nation. These representatives often sell internationally, as well. Reviews can be found in educators’ periodicals.

SUBSIDY PUBLISHERS

Subsidy publishers or co-op publishers (often known as vanity publishers) will offer to publish a book if the author will pay all or part of the cost. A recent Writer’s Market indicated the expense to range from $1,000 to $18,000. This type of publisher offers back a royalty, a percentage of each book sold (the amount varies from 3 percent to 40 percent). However, it is unlikely that a large number of books will be sold. The amount of marketing done by subsidy publishers varies, but will not equal that of traditional publishers. In some cases, an author may be asked to pay for promotional expenses. Subsidy publishers will usually offer to send out sample copies to the media and libraries. However, dedicated book media rarely, if ever, review these books, thus leaving the real work of marketing and distribution to the author. The SCBWI recommends that you avoid any publisher who asks you to pay for the publication of your work.

SELF-PUBLISHING

Self-publishing requires the author to oversee all of the details of book production, from total cost to marketing and distribution. A self-published book almost never gets review media attention. If you are writing a book just to share with your children or grandchildren, a local printer may be able to help you self-publish several copies, or a desktop computer publishing program may give you the book you want. This kind of publishing is primarily for a book that will have a limited, personal audience.

ELECTRONIC PUBLISHING

Since the information on electronic publishing is constantly and quickly changing, coverage on this area is found on our website in order to accommodate the rapid changes in the marketplace.
MENTORING MATTERS
Throughout history, mentorship has played a vital role in success: Walter Kronkite mentored Dan Rather, Maya Angelou mentors Oprah Winfrey, and in the children’s book world, Lucy Sprague Mitchell (founder of Bank Street College) mentored Margaret Wise Brown. Many people say their mentor relationship had a powerful impact on their careers—and their lives. SCBWI encourages mentoring and offers programs through several regional chapters. More regions are creating programs every year.

What are mentors?
Reference books say mentors are advisors, tutors, and counselors. But in reality, mentors are that and much more. Simply put, mentors are farther up the learning curve in an industry and are willing to share what they’ve learned in ways that are beneficial to their mentees.

Why do I need a mentor?
You’ll gain access to experience and knowledge that would take much longer to acquire independently. You’ll have consistent feedback from an insider. You’ll be encouraged, maybe even pushed, to create in ways you might not have considered. Best of all, the quality of your work will improve.

Okay, I’m convinced. How do I find a mentor?
As part of a recent survey, the following SCBWI regions responded that they offer regular mentorship programs:

Will the mentor focus on my interests?

Most regions choose a focus—picture books, middle grade, nonfiction, YA, illustration, etc.—and match mentors having particular expertise in that area with mentees. The focus may change from year to year depending upon who is available to mentor and/or annual regional goals. Regardless, a focus will be clearly defined in marketing materials so you’ll know if that mentor and program is a good fit for you.

Do I have to pay for a mentor?

A little over half of SCBWI mentorship programs do charge a fee to participate. The cost may range from $25-$1,350 depending upon what is included in the program. In some regions, the cost of the mentorship is built into the price of attending a conference. A limited number of regions offer free mentorships.

How does a mentor benefit?

The good news is mentorship is not all about the mentee! Many mentors feel their own creative endeavors benefit from the program, they become more organized, and their editing and critiquing skills improve.

How do I become a mentor?

Each region finds their mentors a bit differently. Over half of SCBWI mentorship programs require mentors to be PAL authors and SCBWI members. Many mentors volunteer and some must apply. Check out the program on your home region’s website and/or contact your mentorship coordinator to find out how to be selected.

Many regions want to start a program and need support. Consider volunteering to help your region—and our SCBWI community—grow in this way.

Whether you are a mentor or mentee, mentoring moves us all.

So... you're giving serious consideration to one or more of the new DIY (do-it-yourself) publishing models. It worked for Christopher Paolini, Amanda Hocking, John Locke, Rachel Yu, and others. Could it work for you?

Maybe. This article walks you through the process so you can weigh the pros and cons, determine your budget and goals, produce and publish the book, and then (hopefully) sell it. We hope this article will help you make the right decision for you and, if you decide to pursue the DIY path, start you on your journey.

The self-publishing realm is changing daily and growing in importance. There are three basic approaches:

1. Hire an author services company to put all the pieces together for you for a fee (and sometimes a cut of the profits).
2. Act like a general contractor and seek out the experts for each element and then publish your assembled book package through a POD (print on demand/digital) printer, a traditional press printer, an ebook publisher, or some combination of them.
3. Cut out the middlemen by DIYing most or all of the elements and taking them straight to a POD printer like Lightning Source or uploading the digital files to an ebook seller.

MAKING YOUR DECISION

Here are several crucial points to carefully ponder before making the final decision to self-publish, and if you decide to, which path to take.

The Pros. You keep all (or most) of the profit from your book sales, you are in control, and your book can be available much sooner than it would be from a traditional publisher. If you're one of the lucky few who attracts strong reader interest and high-profile sales, then the traditional publishers may come looking for you. No more query-go-round.

The Cons. You pay all of the costs and assume the financial risk. You are in control and thus must do all the research and make all the decisions. Making and marketing a book takes time that you could spend writing your next book. Some recent high-profile examples of successful self-published fiction have lessened the long-standing traditional stigma of self-published books (“not good enough to make it in the real publishing world . . .”), but skepticism still lingers, thanks to far too many authors publishing books that are, to put it bluntly, not very good.

Your Goal. Will you be satisfied with a book you can give or sell to family, friends, or some other personal network, or do you hope that your book can be a real competitor in the commercial marketplace? You'll likely spend more time and money on a book intended for retail sale to the general public. For the remainder of this article, we will assume that your goal is a finished product that is a worthy entrant in the commercial market.

Yourself. Are you a total DIYer, the general contractor type, or a writer who just wants to write while others handle the bookmaking and marketing? Can you meet the time and financial commitments required for your hands-on level? Be realistic about your personality, skills, and comfort level. If you’re still game for self-publishing (sometimes called independent publishing or micropublishing), move on to the next step: weighing your budget against your projected costs. To do that, make a business plan.

MAKING YOUR BUSINESS PLAN

Know the costs and be honest about your financial comfort level before you commit to self-publishing. Here are the major steps.

Establish Your Budget. Determine how much money you’re willing to spend to make this book. If you never recover your costs—which happens too often, even with traditionally published books—how will that affect your overall financial situation? How will it affect your important personal relationships?

Establish Your Format. Will your final product be an ebook, a printed book, or both? This decision will greatly affect your costs and choices.

Calculate Costs. Next, work out the cost of making the book and reconcile that with your budget. The costs will include some or all of these items:

- Professional fees—editing, author services, attorney fees for reviewing your contracts
- Book design costs (interior and cover)—illustrations, stock photos, design services or software
Publication costs—digital file creation and uploading, ISBN/barcode procurement, printing/binding/transportation/warehousing, copyright registration

Marketing—printed promo items, mailing lists, postage, online presence (websites, blogs, social media), specialized software or hardware for creation of promo items, marketing/publicity consultants

Set Your Price. Finally, decide how much you’ll charge for your book and work out how many books you’ll need to sell at that price (net of all costs) to break even. Very important: Estimate the market for your book and decide if it’s realistic for you to reach enough readers in that marketplace to break even. Remember, in general, children’s books are more price-sensitive than books for adults.

MAKING YOUR BOOK

The basic steps involved in making your book are these:
1. Write, edit, revise, edit again, and finalize your manuscript.
2. If you go for a printed book, choose its size and format the text.
3. Put together your cover image, back cover, front matter, and back matter.
4. Prepare and upload your digital files to your publisher’s system.
5. Receive and review proofs of the book.
6. Publish and market the final product.

These are just the bare bones, however. Editing and finalizing your manuscript, designing and formatting your text files, and putting together your cover require creative and technological skills. If you want to ensure a professional-level, quality book package, you must hire individual professionals who have the time and talent to work on your project and stay within your budget, enlist an author services company, or learn to do most or all of the essential steps yourself.

Printed Books. If you hope to sell books in bookstores, then you must have printed products. Traditional methods of printing on a press all have significant start-up costs, both for the initial setup and for each print run. This means that if a print run is low—say a thousand or fewer copies—then the unit cost will be high. But as the size of the print run goes higher, the unit cost comes down because the start-up cost is spread over more units.

POD: The Pros. Today self-pubbers have another option: POD—print on demand—a digital process with a relatively low start-up cost and a unit cost that can be lower than press printing in low runs and competitive with press printing even in moderately higher runs. (Note: Some people use the term POD to refer to a business model where books are made only after they are ordered, even singly. Others use the term to refer to the digital printing technology.) POD can greatly reduce the costs of transportation and warehousing, as well as the risk of returns, long the bane of the book business. Too many self-pubbers have ordered a print run in several thousands to get the unit cost down, only to end up with a garage full of books they could not sell.

Switching Midstream. Today you can launch your project with books printed by the POD method and then, if actual sales indicate that it makes sense to print in thousands, switch over to press printing. This does not require a change of ISBN; that number is assigned to the edition, not to the printer. Some self-publishers use POD to produce a few dozen or hundred copies for the Advance Reading Copy phase (typically three or four months before official publication date, when they are seeking reviews), and then switch to press printing.

POD: The Cons. Of course, there are some negative factors on the POD approach. While that method will quickly produce a quality book, some claim that the quality is still shy of a “real press-printed book.” Professional book buyers can spot a POD product, and some still view it as less desirable stock. However, the trend seems to be ever-better quality for POD books and a gradual lessening of the prejudice against them. POD can be used for hardcovers, but most POD books are in trade paperback format; the great majority are sold online, not in stores.

Lightning Source. Many author services companies offer to make POD books for you, but in reality they are simply submitting the order to the company that actually makes virtually all POD books in the United States: Lightning Source. LS is owned by Ingram, the largest book wholesale distributor in the United States. LS deals only with publishers; it is not an author services company. Aaron Shepard’s book POD for Profit details how you can maximize profit by becoming a real publisher and dealing directly with LS. There is an active Yahoo group focused on POD publishing with LS: finance.groups.yahoo.com/group/pod_publishers.

Press Printing. The main negative factor with traditional press printing is cash flow risk. The printing company will demand full payment before delivering the books. You will have transportation and warehousing costs. You will be laying out significant cash that will be recovered only if your sales predictions come true. Even if that happens, it will be many months before you collect revenue from your sales in bookstores, since they take books on consignment and subject to return if not sold within a certain time. And, depending on the terms of your deal with the distributor or wholesaler, you may have to pay the cost of return transportation. To avoid the returns, publishers often authorize the bookstore to sell leftover stock as remainders, distressed merchandise, or “cut-outs”—sales for which the publisher collects little or no revenue, and authors receive no royalties or credits against advances.

Fact-Based Decisions. Before making your POD vs press printing decision, you must do some serious research and calculations. What are the real costs and risks that apply to your specific project? Can you handle the cash flow and financial risk?

The Ebook Option. No doubt, the digital revolution has hit the book biz hard. All publishers, big and small, are struggling to adjust their business models to stay in tune with rapidly shifting trends. Will ebooks do to publishers and bookstores what MP3s and iTunes did to the recorded music business and record stores? The famous examples of fiction self-publisher success all made the great majority of their sales with ebooks sold online. Yes, Amanda Hocking eventually made a seven-figure deal with St. Martin’s Press (Macmillan), but she gained her bargaining strength from the success of her ebooks.

Readers and Tablets. Although there were a few earlier players, the ebook revolution exploded with Amazon’s 2007 introduction of the Kindle. That family of e-readers is now competing with B&N’s Nook, Kobo, PocketBook, the Sony Reader, and many others. All e-readers are in a battle for future market share with Apple’s iPad and other tablets; some mobile phones can display book text, and simple software downloads can turn a PC or Mac computer into an e-reader. Unfortunately, there are many software file formats for ebooks, complicating the problem for the author who simply wants to make their work available to people who read on screens. And then there is the ambiguity about how many young readers are transitioning to ebooks even as the total number of ebook customers rises. Has enough of your target audience transitioned to ebooks?

Simple Answers. There are a few relatively simple answers. One choice is to limit yourself to just the two biggest players, Amazon Kindle (Kindle Direct Publishing: kdp.amazon.com) and B&N’s Nook (PubIt! by Barnes & Noble: pubit.barnesandnoble.com). If you want to cover the whole market, Smashwords offers one-stop-shopping; they can adapt your MS Word text to the file formats needed for compatibility with most reading devices and set up distribution with major vendors (www.smashwords.com). With ebooks, interior design means almost nothing, since the reader chooses the font and the size and most other aspects of appearance of the text.

HIRING PROFESSIONALS

With all the changes in the publishing industry, lots of experts who used to work in traditional publishing houses are now offering their talents on a freelance basis.

Professional Editing. Is your text as strong as it can be? Does it attract and hold readers’ attention? For fiction, are the plot, characters, and narrative voice fully developed? Are you sure there are no typos or bad grammar? Missing or double words? You can’t buy software to evaluate and guide you in revising a manuscript. No matter what else you do with the other stages, do not scrimp on professional editing.

Poorly written and poorly edited content is what gives self-published books the presumption of inferiority. Separate your book from the glut of mediocre books by investing in the manuscript. Your story needs to satisfy readers if you want them to buy your next book and give you good reviews.

Find qualified editors through the SCBWI’s Freelance Editors Directory, available to members (www.scbwi.org and on page 147), the Editorial Freelancers Association (www.the-efa.org), online searches and writers’ forums, and by asking for recommendations from your writing community or from an agent.

Before you sign a contract with a freelance editor, clarify the level of editing you are buying (substantive editing, line editing, copyediting, proofreading), the availability and turnaround time, the fee structure and payment expectations (some editors charge per word or page, others per hour or per project, some require partial or full prepayment), and the editor’s credentials (books he/she’s edited and references). Finally, make sure that the copyright in the editor’s comments on your text belongs to you, the author.

Book Design. At least for printed books, professional book design is crucial to a first class product. Powerful as today’s word processors are, they are not page designers. Even if a casual reader can’t articulate exactly what’s bugging them, a poorly laid out page will give them a nagging sense that something is off. When justifying margins, word processors only adjust the space between words, resulting in “rivers of white”—awkward spaces between words—running down the page. In contrast, a true page design program fine-tunes the spaces between letters (kerning) to produce text lines that are visually smooth, with a consistent balance between black ink and white space. Certainly industry professionals—book buyers and sellers, librarians, reviewers—will notice if a book is not professionally designed.

For a good introduction to this topic, see Book Design and Production by Pete Masterson or InDesign Type by Nigel French.

Find book designers through writing community recommendations and standard Web searches. Most have online portfolios that give you samples of their work. If their sites don’t already list clients and credentials, ask about those. As with other freelance professionals, their standard asking fee is often negotiable and can vary with their current workload, your schedule, and how strongly they relate to your material. Avoid legal disputes with a written agreement that spells out the basic fee, the increments in which it is payable, what happens if you decide against using the designer’s work, and who owns the copyright in the design.

Cover Illustration. Despite the old saw “You can’t judge a book by its cover,” most people get their first and most important impression of a book from its cover. Indeed, an attractive cover that hints at the story’s essence and appeals to the core audience is often the first step in building awareness, which hopefully will lead to interest, and then to desire, and then to action. (Pick it up! Check it out! Buy it! Read it! Recommend it!) To locate candidates for your cover illustration, check Web portals such as www.directoryofillustration.com and www. illustrationweb.com, as well as portfolios and samples at SCBWI conferences and in your local SCBWI group. If you see a book with a cover illustration that you like, you can probably find the artist by a standard Web search. Some illustrators are represented by agents, but many work entirely freelance. Remember that just as important as talent and style are availability, budget, and reliability.

To protect both you and the illustrator, the details of the art commission should be spelled out in a written contract before work begins. Most commonly, a portion of the fee is due upon approval of the rough compositional sketch, another portion is due upon approval of the line drawing, and the final payment is due upon approval and acceptance of the full-color artwork. The agreement should specify ownership of the copyright in the artwork; if it remains with the artist, then the exact rights granted to you by the contract should be spelled out in detail.

Author Services Companies. There are now many “self-publishing” companies, sometimes called author services companies or publishers for hire. Among the well-known names are Aventine Press, BookLocker, CreateSpace (an Amazon company), Dog Ear Publishing, Infinity Publishing, Lulu, and Outskirts Press, but there are many others, with new entrants in the field almost daily. Such companies typically offer an à la carte menu of services, with fixed prices for each and discount pricing for bundles. The typical offerings include editing, cover and interior design, printing and ebook setup, listing with online sellers, and marketing and promotion packages. With CreateSpace, your ebook can be on Amazon in just a few days, and they also do POD (as do most of their competitors). Mark Levine’s book The Fine Print of Self-Publishing explains what these companies do, details the differences between them (naming names), and ranks them in five levels: outstanding, pretty good, just okay, publishers to avoid, and worst of the worst. The Independent Publishing Magazine site also reviews author service companies (mick Rooney.blogspot.com). Using an author services company will simplify the journey, but you will not be able to make your own choices of editor, designer, illustrator, etc. If you want that level of control and customization, then you will have to don the general contractor hat, acting much like a traditional publisher by seeking out and hiring the expertise that is most appropriate for your project.

WARNING: It has traditionally been considered unethical for a publisher to make the author pay for the manufacturing costs and to also demand a portion of the proceeds; under that model (usually called a vanity press), the companies make most of the money from the fees they charge to authors, and thus they have little incentive to market the books. However, the publishing realm is in the midst of a major transformation, and author service companies and e-publishers are blurring lines with their mix of paid-for services and royalty requirements. Read contract language carefully to make sure you understand it and know exactly how much of your hard-earned cash and profits each company requires. Be wary about enthusiastic sales pitches for marketing and promotion programs; the language of the written contract will override the sales pitch and likely will require only “best efforts.”

One thing hasn’t changed: Never sign away your rights to the content itself. You are hiring these companies for services only; the book itself is yours. Best practices include the following.

Background Check. Look up your prospective publisher on the Writer Beware (www.sfwa.org/for-authors/writer-beware/) and Preditors & Editors (www.preed.com) websites, do a general online search, and ask around writers’ forums and your writing community.

Review the Contract. Look for an exact description of services you are buying, the payment terms that apply to each service, and an explicit statement that you retain the copyright in all resulting works, including their editorial suggestions and the manner in which disputes will be resolved (cancellation, arbitration, mediation, or litigation; where?).

ISBNs, etc. Buy your own ISBNs and barcodes. An ISBN (International Standard Book Number) is the thirteen-digit number that uniquely identifies each edition of each book and its publisher. Author service companies, POD producers, and e-publishers buy ISBNs in bulk and provide them to their customers—and thus those ISBNs identify them as the publisher, not you. ISBNs cannot be transferred or assigned to anyone else. To ensure that you are the sole owner of your book, buy your own ISBNs singly or in bulk directly from R.R. Bowker (the official ISBN agency for the United States) or any of Bowker’s approved sellers, who are listed at www.isbn.org/standards/home/Pubresellers.asp. Bowker also provides barcodes readable by store scanners for printed books that have your ISBN. Some author service companies offer a package in which they handle ISBNs, barcodes, and LCCNs (Library of Congress Catalog Numbers, used by libraries for cataloging purposes; if you think your book will be stocked in libraries, you can obtain an LCCN directly at www.loc.gov/publish/cip/).

Copyright. Register your copyright yourself, under your name. Some author service companies will register copyright for you, but be sure that it will be in your name. If your publisher wants to register it under their name, that’s a red flag that they’re grabbing at something that isn’t theirs. You can register the copyright on your own through the U.S. Copyright Office’s e-copyright feature at www.copyright.gov/ecopyright/index.html.

DOING MOST OR ALL OF IT YOURSELF

If you’re going the DIY route, software is available to help you prepare your files. Word and WordPerfect programs have limited formatting features; the quality you’ll end up with, at least for printed books, is noticeably less impressive than professionally designed pages. Adobe’s InDesign program is the industry standard page layout design program. It can be bought on its own or as part of a Creative Suite that includes Acrobat, Photoshop, Illustrator, and many other design-related programs. If you choose this route, be prepared for substantial software costs and some major learning time. The Serif software company also markets design programs, including the page designer called Page Plus: their prices are much lower than Adobe, but the Serif products are not so widely known.

MAKING READERS AWARE OF YOUR BOOK

You can knock yourself out writing and producing a quality book, but if potential readers don’t know about it, you won’t sell many copies. It’s not realistic to say, “It’s on Amazon; readers will find it and it will take off.” Even Big Six publishers have to aggressively market their books. Thanks to the Internet, there are more ways than ever to bring your book to your readers’ attention. However, if you plan to use the Internet to market books to children under thirteen, then you must be aware of the Children’s Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA), a federal law that restricts collecting the personal information of children under age thirteen. See www.ftc.gov/privacy/coppa/faq.shtm.

Other articles in this guide tell you about hiring consultants, self-marketing, and harnessing the power of social media. Our point here is this: If your goal is to sell your self-published book to the general public in the retail market, you must develop and execute a marketing program that somehow makes the opinion leaders in your target audience aware of your book.

OTHER RESOURCES

Self-publishing is exciting, but don’t let passion trump due diligence. Research, research, and research some more before committing to a company or path. Your money, reputation, and personal happiness are all at stake. Look into the Independent Book Publishers Association (www.ibpa-online.com), a not-for-profit trade association representing independent book publishers. The IBPA offers many educational and cooperative marketing programs, including twice-yearly mailings of one-page flyers to schools and libraries. Find a list of the IBPA’s local affiliates at bit.ly/7bnuxH. Also, check out Independent Publisher online magazine, which covers self-publishing alongside the publishing industry as a whole (www.independentpublisher.com).

Self-publishing success stories are on the rise, and the tools to create and distribute printed or digital content are at our fingertips. With the click of a mouse, your dream book can be distributed worldwide for the price of a coffee and a toasted bagel.

YA author Brittany Geragotelis self-published Life’s a Witch through Wattpad, an online community where fans and writers connect. In one year, her book had 18 million reads, landing Geragotelis major press and a three-book deal with Simon & Schuster. “I was constantly getting requests from fans who wanted to purchase their own copy of the book . . . that was really what ended up fueling my reasoning to publish,” she said.

Geragotelis used Amazon’s CreateSpace, a user-friendly print-on-demand service with a free online setup and 24/7 customer support. The simple step-by-step format at www.createspace.com offers templates for formatting your book as well as free ISBNs, wide distribution options, an online storefront, placement on Amazon’s website, and outstanding print quality, all with a low cost of production. Familiarity with Microsoft Word or Adobe InDesign is recommended when formatting your book. If these programs aren’t your cup of tea, you can always hire a professional.

CreateSpace is the service that I use for all of my children’s books, and with great success. Other print-on-demand services may be a better fit for your needs, such as Lulu.com, Xlibris, and Blurb, which all offer a range of comprehensive services, including turning your printed book into an ebook. For any self-publishing service that you consider, it’s wise to carefully investigate customer reviews and be cautious when paying for extras, like marketing packages.

Children’s ebooks and graphic novels are formatted in a “fixed layout,” replicating each printed page with static text and images contained in a set width. Novels are formatted as “standard ebooks” and have resizable text that automatically reflows. The ePub file format is accepted as the industry standard for ebooks, but the technology hasn’t quite evolved into a centralized system. The top four online ebook retailers (Amazon, Apple, B&N, and Kobo) each have their own unique reading device and file specifications.

Book Creator ($4.99), the number one book-making app for the iPad in forty-two countries, is a simple and intuitive way for adults and children to make fixed-layout books. With the touch of a finger, you can drag and drop images, input text, and add background music or invisible audio buttons. “For me, digital publishing is all about removing the barriers to entry for creators. Digital provides a platform for great stories, art, and ideas to reach their audience,” says Dan Amos of Red Jumper Studio, who developed Book Creator.

The equivalent of Book Creator for other e-readers has yet to emerge. Several digital ebook distribution services, like Book Baby, offer standard ebook conversion for a wide range of devices, but are limited in the number of e-readers they convert children’s books for. Building fixed-layout or standard ebooks in-house takes time and technical expertise; to help, Lynda.com offers excellent tutorials.

We are in the Wild West of self-publishing, where possibilities abound. Though new approaches to publishing are changing rapidly, the self-publisher is emerging as an increasingly important role.
In today’s market, self-publishing has become a norm. More people than ever before are able to write their great American novel and see it in print. But that dream gets complicated when the book is a picture book. Most self-publishers need to hire an illustrator for the picture half of the equation.

Illustrators often receive e-mail requests from self-publishers. Yet, so many of those writers are new to the publishing industry, they don’t know what to ask for or what to expect when hiring an illustrator. I’ll clarify the main concepts.

The first thing is to know the difference between self and traditional publishing—in traditional publishing, the publisher pays you. In self-publishing, you pay the publisher. This means that you, as a self-publisher, will need to pay an illustrator for their work.

How much? That depends. Even in traditional publishing amounts vary wildly. But here’s how to think about it. Illustrating a picture book takes time—anywhere from two months to a year. How much do you make in that same amount of time? Your project will be the compensation for that illustrator’s life (mortgage/rent, food, car, insurance, etc.). You should expect to pay a fair wage and for the number to be at least four or five digits.

Don’t have the money? Oftentimes, self-publishers ‘invite’ illustrators to reap the rewards of royalties once the book comes out. But if there’s no money to pay the illustrator, there’s probably no money to advertise, which means the project stands little chance of success. The result is the illustrator could end up working for free. And nobody can eat on that.

But your book is a guaranteed seller...

The sad news is there’s no such thing. Add to that, most booksellers have limited policies when dealing with or representing self-published books. Their reasons are good:

1. Most small publishing houses don’t accept returns, the bookstore could get stuck with books they can’t sell.
2. While there are exceptions, most self-published books have an amateur look to them.
3. It can be more hassle to deal with people who don’t know the industry than it’s worth.

So if traditional bookstores won’t carry them, self-published books are rarely noticed unless accompanied by serious advertising. In traditional publishing, companies spend millions of dollars using their already established media platforms to get their books noticed. Unless a writer is already out there in some large marketing capacity for their core career, their self-published projects have an even harder time reaching the marketplace’s radar.

As a result, whatever you pay that illustrator before publication is most likely all they’ll ever see from your project. You can negotiate royalties, but in self-publishing, royalties should be thought of as an unexpected bonus, not fair compensation for the job.

“Good exposure” is another term illustrators hear too much of—the joke being that you can die from exposure. Hiring an illustrator is a business arrangement like hiring a painter or a stock broker (who would never work for free or for good exposure). It’s a professional relationship like any other and requires a contract.

In the contract will be listed several key points. The first point will be the amount to be paid and when those payments will be made. (1/2 up front, 1/2 upon acceptance of final art, or 1/3 up front, 1/3 on acceptance of sketches, 1/3 upon acceptance of final art are standard arrangements.)

Another key point is the matter of copyright—who will own the final artwork. Typically the copyright stays with the illustrator (copyright applied and paid for by the publisher). However, you can purchase the copyright to the artwork from the illustrator to be able to do whatever you like with it—this is called work-for-hire. Expect to pay more for this. Although honestly, you don’t need to hold the copyright. It’s one of those misconceptions of hiring an artist—that you have to own the artwork to use it. The contract should spell out exactly how the usage breaks down, both for you and for the illustrator (use of the artwork for the illustrator’s self-promotion should be expected and allowed).

To be fair to the illustrator, there should be a limit to the number of revisions permitted at each stage of creation. (No more than three revisions per sketch is reasonable.) Few revisions should be made after the completion of the art. (If communication has been good, the client should have a good understanding of what they will receive.)
This avoids the illustrator being hired as ‘hands’ for a person who can see the images in their head but can’t draw themselves, which is an untenable and unrealistic scenario and can lead to countless revisions sucking up any benefit of compensation by requiring too much time. “I’ll know it when I see it” is never a fair way to work unless you are willing to pay extra for revisions above and beyond the limit. (Again, this should be in the contract.) Ideally, you are hiring an illustrator to bring their unique vision to the project.

That said, sometimes, things don’t work. It’s rare, but does tend to happen more often with inexperienced creators. (You could hate the illustration direction or the illustrator could lose enthusiasm/patience for the project.) Its why there should also be a kill fee in the contract. If for whatever reason you or the illustrator needs to leave the project, an amount should be agreed upon as to how much the illustrator will keep for already completed work. The 1/2 or 1/3 down payment is standard depending on how deep into the project you get. This is a circumstance you hope never will occur and certainly, nobody goes into a project thinking this way, but sometimes it can’t be avoided.

Also, understand that because so few self-published works reach popular success, they typically cannot further an artist’s career. They might make for some nice portfolio pieces or be good practice for a younger illustrator, but the value for the illustrator on self-published projects, if they are willing to take them on, lies in the cash flow, not buying into the concept.

And finally, it is only polite (and traditionally expected) to give the illustrator at least five to twenty copies of the final product free and clear for them to either use for advertising or to keep for whatever reason.

The bottom line is, approach hiring your illustrator like you would any professional. Do your industry research, make sure you understand the terms I’ve used above, and walk in with a budget. Never say, “I don’t know, how much would you charge?” Most illustrators have worked with clients from all sorts of backgrounds and recognize the signs (red flags) of those who have not done their homework and may be too difficult to work with to be worth their time (usually because of inexperience or unrealistic expectations). Don’t let that be you! If you come prepared, you are much more likely to land the illustrator you really want and achieve a successful product.

Bottom line, self-publishing is a growing industry. When approached professionally, it can be a wonderful experience for all involved.

Candace Fleming, one of America’s most highly-acclaimed authors of fiction and nonfiction for children, says that writing fiction is like baking a cake with ingredients you’ve carefully selected at a well-stocked grocery store. In other words, when we probe our imaginations for ideas, there are no limitations. Fleming compares writing nonfiction to baking a cake with a mismatched assortment of ingredients your husband (who has never cooked a meal in his life) picked up at a small, local market.

I love this analogy because it perfectly explains the challenges of crafting a true story based on documentable facts. Nonfiction writers work long and hard to gather information, but sometimes the tantalizing tidbits we’re hoping to find simply don’t exist. When that happens, it can be tempting to invent dialogue or imagine scenes or rearrange chronology to improve a story arc. So tempting that we’d love a term that justifies doing so. That’s why it’s no surprise that some writers are currently misusing the term informational book, thinking it’s a kind of nonfiction that’s based on true information but takes occasional liberties with the verifiable facts.

But that is NOT a legitimate use of the term. If your goal is to write nonfiction, you can’t tinker with the facts to strengthen a story. If you make up anything, anything at all, you’re writing fiction. Period.

Definition 1: Librarians
So what is an informational book? To answer this question, we need to jump into a time machine, strap on our seatbelts, and head back to 1876. That’s when John Dewey invented an ingenious book cataloging system that was quickly adopted by libraries around the world.

But the Dewey Decimal System wasn’t perfect. By the early 1900s, a growing number of library patrons were complaining that it was difficult to find a good novel. That’s because fiction (novels and short stories) was interspersed among all the other categories of literature (essays, letters, speeches, satire, etc.) in the 800s. In addition, all the books were organized by original language of publication, so novels by American writers were nowhere near novels by German writers or French writers.

How did librarians solve this problem? Sometime between 1905 and 1910, they started pulling novels and short story collections out of the 800s and creating a separate fiction section with books arranged alphabetically by the author’s last name. Soon, librarians began calling everything left behind (still arranged according to Dewey’s system) nonfiction. Besides factual books based on documented research, the nonfiction section included drama, poetry, and folktales.

Eventually, librarians realized that they needed a term to describe just the factual, research-based books in the nonfiction section, and around 1970, they began calling these titles informational books. That’s why the Robert F. Sibert Informational Book Medal, which is sponsored by the American Library Association, defines informational books as “those written and illustrated to present, organize, and interpret documentable, factual material.”

Definition 2: Literacy Educators
But that’s not the end of the story. Unaware of what was happening in the library world, in the 1980s, literacy educators began using the term informational texts to describe a narrow subset of nonfiction writing that presents information about science, history, and other content areas.

According to this usage, informational books do not include biographies, how-to descriptions (instructions), or any kind of narrative writing. This definition, which is roughly equivalent to expository nonfiction, became widespread in 2000, following the publication of a landmark academic article by Nell Duke.

For a while, librarians and educators used their separate definitions with few problems. But when Congress passed the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, schools changed their funding priorities, and school library budgets started to shrink. To save their jobs, school librarians began taking on new roles, including teaching responsibilities. Not surprisingly, this led to disagreements about the proper use of the term informational books.
Definition 3: Common Core State Standards
The confusion intensified in 2010 when the Common Core State Standards defined informational text in a much broader way, including all narrative and expository nonfiction books (the librarian definition) plus reference books, instructions, forms, maps, persuasive essays, etc. As a result, we now have three contradictory definitions floating around.

And yet, despite the contradictions and the confusion they cause, all three definitions have one thing in common. None of them condones the use of made-up material with the goal of strengthening a story. NONE.

What the Heck is Informational Fiction?
Recently, some librarians and educators have begun using the term informational fiction to describe books that are largely true and accurate but not completely supported by documented research.

These books include historical fiction, like the Dear America series and picture book biographies with some made-up dialogue or imagined scenes or events presented out of chronological order to improve storytelling.

They also include STEM-themed books that present concepts accurately, but contain made-up characters, fantastical art, or other embellishments. Examples include The Magic School Bus series and some animal lifecycle stories.

This helpful new term acknowledges that, in some cases, taking creative liberties with true, documentable facts can be an effective way to share ideas and information with young readers. But it also emphasizes the critical importance of distinguishing between what’s real, what’s true, what’s verifiable and what’s not.

Again and again, we see examples of Americans trusting political rhetoric without question. They don’t check facts. They don’t ask themselves if a particular news outlet has an agenda. They don’t demand to know the source of statistics. If we want that to change, we need to teach children to identify truthiness. And one of the best ways to do that is to be transparent about the literature we create for them. Is it fact or is it fiction? 😊

Not long ago, nonfiction books for children routinely included dry, stodgy, expository writing—prose that explains, describes, or informs. Most books were text heavy, with just a few scattered images decorating rather than enriching the content and meaning. But nonfiction has changed tremendously in recent years, evolving in three distinct directions.

Adding Narrative Scenes
In the mid-1990s, children’s authors began crafting narrative nonfiction—prose that tells a true story or conveys an experience. Early standouts included The Great Fire by Jim Murphy (Scholastic, 1995); An Extraordinary Life: The Story of a Monarch Butterfly by Laurence Pringle, illus. Bob Marstall (Orchard/Scholastic, 1997); and The Snake Scientist by Sy Montgomery, photos Nic Bishop (Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, 1999). This style of writing gradually gained momentum during the 2000s. Today, it’s both incredibly popular and highly esteemed.

Narrative nonfiction appeals to fiction lovers because it includes narrative scenes that give readers a bird’s eye view of the world and the people being described. These scenes are linked by expository bridges that provide necessary background while speeding through parts of the true story that don’t require close inspection. The art of crafting narrative nonfiction lies in pacing, which means choosing just the right scenes to flesh out.

The ratio of narrative to expository text ranges widely in narrative nonfiction. Most picture book biographies are brimming with narrative scenes. Books about historical events often include a bit more exposition. Science-themed books like Neighborhood Sharks: Hunting with the Great Whites of California’s Farallon Islands by Katherine Roy (Roaring Brook/Macmillan, 2014); When Lunch Fights Back: Wickedly Clever Animal Defenses by Rebecca L. Johnson (Millbrook Press/Lerner, 2014); and Giant Squid by Candace Fleming, illus. Eric Rohmann (Roaring Brook/Macmillan, 2016) devote roughly equal numbers of pages to narrative and expository text.

Books For Browsing
Thanks to Dorling Kindersley’s innovative Eyewitness Books series, the 1990s also brought remarkable changes to traditional expository nonfiction. These beautifully designed, lavishly illustrated books with short text blocks and extended captions revolutionized children’s nonfiction by giving fact-loving kids a fresh, engaging way to access information.

By the mid-2000s, National Geographic, Time for Kids, the Discovery Channel, and others were also publishing what is now known as “browseable books,” “data books,” and “factoid books.” Popular examples include the National Geographic Kids Everything series, the Time for Kids Big Book of Why series, and For Boys Only: The Biggest, Baddest Book Ever by Marc Aronson and H.P. Newquist (Feiwel & Friends/Macmillan, 2007).

Inspired by the maker movement, these publishers, as well as others, have recently begun offering what booksellers call “active nonfiction”—browseable books that teach skills readers can use to engage in an activity. Examples include Sewing School: 21 Sewing Projects Kids Will Love to Make by Andria Lisle (Storey, 2010), Minecraft: Construction Handbook by Matthew Needler (Scholastic, 2014), and Brain Games: The Mind-Blowing Science of Your Amazing Brain by Jennifer Swanson (National Geographic Kids, 2015).

The Rise of Expository Literature
When Congress passed the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, school funding priorities changed. School library budgets were slashed, and many school librarians lost their jobs. Around the same time, the proliferation of websites made straightforward, kid-friendly information widely available without cost, which meant general survey books about volcanoes or whales or the Boston Tea Party were no longer mandatory purchases for libraries.

As nonfiction book sales to schools and libraries slumped, authors and illustrators had to raise their game. The result has been a new breed of finely-crafted expository literature that delights as well as informs.

Besides being meticulously researched and fully faithful to the facts, expository literature features captivating art, dynamic design, and rich,

Tips for Submitting Nonfiction

Today, a wide range of children’s book publishers are actively acquiring nonfiction, and there’s no reason to think that will change any time soon. Before submitting, it’s important to know which kind of nonfiction you’re writing so that you can identify publishers and even specific editors who may be interested in your manuscript.

» Publishers like Capstone, ABDO, and Rosen continue to produce books with traditional expository text. Aimed specifically at the school and library market, these books are usually assigned to published and pre-published writers who submit a resume and writing sample.

» Editors at small publishers like Charlesbridge, Peachtree, and Chronicle, as well as many imprints of large New York houses, are looking for engaging picture book biographies and other kinds of narrative nonfiction. Reading a wide range of books similar to yours can help you identify editors and imprints that might acquire your manuscript.

» Dorling Kindersley, National Geographic Kids, and Ripley Entertainment are just a few of the companies currently interested in browseable books, which are often assigned to experienced writers. While some active nonfiction is also published by large media companies, it’s also produced by small niche publishers who are often open to manuscripts and proposals from new writers. To learn more about this growing book category, visit a local bookstore and see what it’s stocking.

» Until recently, smaller publishers were often the best fit for expository literature, but that’s beginning to change. More and more of these books are being acquired by specialized imprints at big New York houses all the time. Again, read widely and use similar titles to guide your submissions process.

DESCRIPTION: Publishing program of the Capstone imprints includes nonfiction, fiction, picture books, interactive books, audio books, and literacy programs. Capstone Young Readers is a trade division, publishing several imprints into the trade market; it includes board books, picture books, chapter books, middle-grade series fiction, and graphic novels. Nearly all books are written on a work-for-hire basis and are part of a larger series; publisher is always looking for new authors and illustrators to help craft high-appeal titles. Copyright and all reproduction rights are held by the company unless otherwise expressly stated.

COMPASS POINT BOOKS imprint publishes smart nonfiction for middle school readers. The imprint weaves comprehensive narrative with intriguing facts and real-world examples to make history, science, and biographies come alive for readers in grades 5-12.

HEINEMANN-RAINTREE imprint publishes curriculum-driven nonfiction that encourages inquiry and satisfies curiosity for students grades K-8. Comprehensive text and captivating images combine to create a reading experience rich in content and diverse points of view. Among its most recognized brands include Acorn, Heinemann First Library, and Raintree Perspectives.

PICTURE WINDOW BOOKS imprint publishes illustrated fiction and nonfiction easy readers, picture books, and chapter books for grades pre K-4.

STONE ARCH BOOKS imprint focuses on inspiring independent reading with compelling contemporary and appropriate fiction for readers in grades K-9. The imprint transforms reluctant readers into reading enthusiasts through an exciting array of topics and genres.

SWITCH PRESS is a young adult imprint publishing contemporary nonfiction such as cookbooks, craft and how-to titles, and narrative nonfiction, as well as historical fiction, fantasy, graphic novels, and poetry. Titles released both in hardcover and digital formats.

The International Market Survey contains a list of publishers big and small in active SCBWI regions outside the USA. These include publishers in Australia, Austria, Canada, Germany, Greece, India, Israel, Malaysia, New Zealand, Philippines, Singapore, and South Africa. It is a valuable resource for members in these countries where the publishers are based as well as for members around the globe. This is not a comprehensive listing of all the international publishers in these regions but it does include many of those who desired to be listed and who are active participants in SCBWI conferences and meetings.

You can find the International Market Survey on SCBWI.org under “Resource Library.” Click on The Book and follow the directions to the International Market Survey link.

Many of the publishers have existed for a long time and are part of large multinational publishers. These houses may publish many hundreds of books each year while other publishers are much newer independent publishers, and they might only publish a few titles each year. Many are trade publishers but some only publish educational titles. Some will take only agented submissions while others are open to unsolicited manuscripts but only at specific times of the year. Many publish in English (some in addition to their native tongue), while others publish in their native tongue only—the respective websites (which might be in a native tongue and not in English) will be the most appropriate source of information.

Maybe you have a manuscript or illustrations that are perfectly suited to these international publishers. That is fantastic! BUT before inquiring of a publisher, it is of critical importance that members consider whether their creative work is culturally respectful—is the text, or are the illustrations appropriate for the publisher in that country!

Some other important considerations:

- the large multinational publishers have different requirements in their respective international offices.
- payment rates and times vary but all are PAL publishers and will pay in their local currency. It would be up to the recipient to arrange for exchange to their national currency.
- all publish for the markets in their countries. Some of their titles are also co-published or the rights sold for publication elsewhere.
- many of these publishers only take submissions from nationals and those who are residents of their countries, and some of the publishers have limited times for receiving manuscripts.
- work samples will probably not be returned due to the restrictive costs of international postage.
- some have very specific content focus and genres.

The survey contains many details but it is imperative that as well as reading this information, members visit the websites of the publishers to obtain the most up-to-date information.

We look forward to hearing of your successes.
Each year, the SCBWI surveys publishers and editors for lists of up to ten books acquired or edited recently. It is our hope that this publication will be a useful tool in targeting your manuscript submissions. By providing you with information about each publisher/editor's tastes and acquisition decisions, this document can help you determine where to submit your manuscripts and/or illustrations.

Listed under each publisher's or editor's name are the books they listed as indicative of their preferences, tastes, and sensibilities. Understanding these editors' tastes can help you better target your submissions—not by duplicating the books on their list, but by learning what types of stories and voices interest them.

This publication is alphabetized by publishing house. In the case of picture books, the book's author is listed first, followed by its illustrator (Author/Illustrator). This list is designed to act as a companion piece to the SCBWI Market Survey of Books for Young Readers. Please review the Market Survey for specific submission information as not all houses are accepting submissions at this time.

Here are scores of small presses currently publishing books for children and young adults. Some are well-established publishing houses that have been in business for decades. Others start up, publish books for a few years and then quietly fade away. Many small presses are niche publishers, catering to a specific need not met by mainstream publishers. Generally, small presses will pay a small advance plus a small royalty, or will offer an author or illustrator a flat fee. As one small press publisher noted, publishing with a small press is not the road to riches. It can, however, be the road to getting your offbeat manuscript published. Many authors and illustrators report that they get very personal attention from small press editors, even though the first printing may only be between 500 to 1,500 copies.

What is most important for users of this guide is to study the kinds of books published by small presses. Learn who the audience is for each publisher to whom you intend to send your work. Many publishers now have websites and we have included this information when it was provided. However, it doesn’t hurt to surf the web for a particular publisher, since this is becoming a popular way for publishers to advertise their books. Although we have included e-mail addresses of those who supplied them, check with a publisher before you submit your work through electronic mail.

Do your homework: in your cover letter, let the publisher know that you have studied its list. Give solid reasons why you think your proposal or manuscript will fit its needs. In order to find out what a publisher’s needs are, check out the submission guidelines at its website. Send for a catalogue and for author’s/illustrator’s guidelines. Always enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope (SASE) with your catalogue request.

Over 70 small to medium size independent publishers were sent questionnaires to determine if they were receptive to unsolicited submissions from SCBWI members. We included publishers who are actively seeking new authors and illustrators as well as those who are currently closed to submissions with the hope that eventually they will reopen. We tried to get as much specific information as possible about the kinds of books each small press publishes. Many publishers included specific titles you might want to read before submitting your work. Enclose an SASE with all correspondence to these publishers.

Wherever possible, explicit information is provided for each publication’s requirements, policies, and procedures. An effort has been made to include more information for illustrators and artists. In some instances, publishers may not have provided all the information requested, and guidelines change, so always send for guidelines.

KNOW THE MAGAZINE MARKET

Study this guide to get an idea of which magazines interest you and may be interested in your work. Then get your hands on those magazines! If your library or newsstand does not carry a magazine, write a letter to the editor requesting guidelines and a sample copy (there is usually a fee). You can often find details for doing this along with back issues and theme lists on a magazine’s website.

STUDY THE MAGAZINE

Look at the quality, format, style, and trends of the magazine. Note how much is devoted to fiction, nonfiction, short stories, artwork, etc. Notice the titles, types of stories, articles, word length, and vocabulary. Compare and critique your work against the published work. Would your work fit in with this magazine? Remember that the stories and articles you read are the type of work the magazine is seeking. It’s best to study current issues as formats and what is included in the magazine change.

STUDY THE GUIDELINES

When they are available, look up online guidelines for more current information. Take notice of the description of the magazine, the age level, and what the magazine accepts. What will they pay you? What rights do they buy? How long will it take to get a response? Take note of the editor’s comments. All editors want contributors to submit work that fits the magazine’s format and requirements. This can only be done by following the magazine’s guidelines closely. If you are writing a nonfiction piece, be sure to include all documentation the magazine requires. Understand the terms before you submit your work; the time spent researching the magazine and its guidelines could mean the difference between a sale and rejection.

THINK LIKE AN EDITOR

Editors want a professional-looking manuscript (see “From Keyboard to Printed Page”). In the top left-hand corner of the first page you should include your name, address, zip, phone number, and social security number (single spaced). In the top right-hand corner, include the word count.

Some editors prefer queries (make sure to check), especially for nonfiction articles. When submitting queries, include writing samples or clips of your published work. Describe your idea and qualifications, listing your publishing credits, if any. Before you query make sure you will be able to gather enough information to write the article. Illustrators should query with color copies (no larger than 8” x 10”) of at least five different pieces of art, all labeled with your name, address, phone number, and type of media. Send with a cover letter or résumé, tear sheets if any, and an SASE. Send only what each editor asks for in the guidelines and state that the editor may keep the work for his/her file. Never send original art work. Editors may keep your work on file to contact you for future assignments.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS

When a magazine purchases your work, its buys certain rights. Be sure you understand what rights you are selling before you agree to the purchase.
First North American Serial Rights means the publisher purchases the permission to publish the work for the first time in North America only. All other rights belong to you, the creator of the work.

First Serial Rights permits the publisher to publish your work for the first time in its magazine, journal, or periodical. All other rights belong to you, the creator of the work.

One-time rights differ from First North American Serial Rights in that the purchasers have no guarantee that they will be the first to publish the work. One-time rights most often apply to photos, illustrations and artwork but occasionally will apply to writing, especially in the religious Sunday School take-home papers.

All Rights means the editor purchases all the rights to your work. Sometimes the editor is flexible, and may allow the rights to revert back to you. Selling all rights means you allow the publication to use your work as many times as it wants to, at any time, in any place, without further payment to you. You will always be given credit for writing the piece but you cannot resell it elsewhere.

MAILING YOUR MANUSCRIPT

Always send a copy of your manuscript while keeping the original for your files. Mail the copy flat in a large manila envelope and include an SASE with sufficient postage. You may also want to include a self-addressed, stamped postcard with the following information on the back: [Name of magazine] is in receipt of [manuscript title] on [date]. Never e-mail your manuscript unless the guidelines say it is allowed or you are asked by an editor to do so.

MAILING ILLUSTRATIONS

Never send original artwork until instructed by the editor. When querying, send color copies of artwork protected by cardboard or cover stock that won’t bend easily, in a large manila envelope. Be sure to mark the envelope: ILLUSTRATIONS—DO NOT BEND. Always include an SASE. When the editor requests the original artwork, protect it the same way but make sure to send the package by certified mail, UPS, or Federal Express. This way you will be able to trace the package if it gets lost in the mail.

MAILING PHOTOGRAPHS

Most editors request 5” x 7” black-and-white glossy prints, although some prefer an 8” x 10”. Include your name, address, phone number, identity and source of each photo, either on a separate piece of paper (with numbered photos) or typed on a label and attached to the back of each photo. Do not mount photos on board or paper. Include model releases. Mail photos in photo envelopes or place between cardboard of equal size. Mark envelope: PHOTOS—DO NOT BEND. Include an SASE.

IN GENERAL

Keep copies of everything you send (what you send, which magazine, which editor, date). If your manuscript is returned, make a note of that and try another suitable magazine. If you have not heard from the editor in the time stated in its guidelines, write a courteous letter along with an SASE asking the status of the work. Remember, getting your work published is not easy and takes persistence. Don’t give up if you are rejected: it happens to the best of us!

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Assignment

This is an agreement between the publisher and writer, or illustrator, in which the writer or illustrator agrees to do a specified job. The agreement may include a description of the assignment, the fee agreed upon, when it will be paid, if there will be any payment in advance, a completion date, and if there is a kill fee.

Byline

Clips

Samples of published work, usually from magazines or newspapers. It can also mean reviews of your work or publicity about you and/or your work (receiving an award for your work, for example).

Contributor’s Copy

As the contributor of work to a magazine, you may receive one or more free copies of the magazine in which your work appears.

Copyright

The copyright law, effective January 1, 1978, protects your work as soon as it has been created in tangible form, even if not yet published. It recognizes you as the creator and owner of the work and grants you all rights, benefits and privileges the ownership entails. Usually a publication formally copyrights your work for you, but if the publication is not copyrighted, you must do so. The year stated in the copyright notice of a publication is the year of publication, not creation.

Cover Letter

A brief letter accompanying a query or a complete manuscript telling the editor pertinent information, or it may outline your expertise, your background, special knowledge, or remind the editor she/he requested your manuscript or illustration.

Features/Articles

Features and articles generally fall into categories: special columns, special topics or themes, special departments of the magazines.

Fee

If a fee is indicated for a sample copy of the magazine and/or guidelines, include check or money order, made payable to the magazine, unless otherwise stated. DO NOT send cash or loose stamps.

Fillers

Usually a short item used by an editor to “fill” remaining space in a column or a special space in the magazine, such as jokes, anecdotes, poetry, puzzles, recipes, quips, etc.
Illustrations
Can refer to any kind of artwork or graphic designs, engravings or photography. They are usually paid for separately from manuscripts unless it is specified as a package sale. A package sale includes the sale of the manuscript and illustrations, which can be done by one person or in partnership with another.

International Reply Coupon
This coupon, also known as an IRC, is purchased at the post office to be used instead of stamps for the SASE when sending a manuscript to a foreign country. The editor exchanges the IRC for that country’s corresponding stamps to return your manuscript. The number of IRCs required depends upon the weight of the manuscript. Never send a personal check instead of IRCs.

Kill Fee
The writer or illustrator receives a portion of the agreed-upon fee for a work which was subsequently canceled. Kill fee terms should be agreed upon when the assignment is accepted; otherwise, the writer or illustrator will not be entitled to one. Kill fees are not common and are only offered to writers or illustrators working on assignment, not on speculation. After receiving the kill fee, the writer or illustrator may submit the work elsewhere.

Legal-size Envelope
Also known as the #10 or business-size envelope, used in sending business correspondence, and is often the size required for an SASE.

Model Release
This form is signed by the person in the photograph (or by his/her legal guardian if a minor). It authorizes the photographer to use the photograph for business as well as editorial purposes. If the subject of the photograph is an animal, object, building, or place, then a model release must be signed by the owner.

MS

Payment on Acceptance
The editor, purchaser of a written piece or illustration, agrees on behalf of the publisher to send a check for the work upon acceptance or agreement of purchasing the work. Payment on acceptance could be as long as several months, depending on the magazine’s pay schedule.

Payment on Publication
The editor, purchaser of a written piece or illustration, agrees to send a check for the work upon publication of the work. This could be several months to several years, depending upon its editorial calendar.

The emphasis of the essay or article is on the photo rather than the text, or is on both. Sometimes photo essays or features tell their own story with few words.

Public Domain
Material whose copyright has run out or lapsed is in the public domain. Since copyright law has changed several times in recent years, determining if a particular work is public domain or not may require considerable research.

Query
A letter addressed to an editor that tells about a written item or illustration you wish to submit to the magazine. It includes your proposed idea, a sample of your work, bibliography for nonfiction, your expertise and background, and why you believe your work can make a difference to the readers.

Reprints
Occasionally magazines will purchase reprints of previously published pieces. When sending reprints, make sure you have fulfilled the obligations of the first magazine in which it was published. Your contract will explain when you are free to resell your writing. Even if you were paid on acceptance for the first publication of your writing, it does not guarantee that the work will be published at any specific date unless so specified in the purchase. It may mean that the work can be held for months or years before publication. This means that you, the creator, cannot resell the work until it is published.

Response Time
The length of time the editor takes to report back to you about the work you submitted, a query, or to a request for information. If the editor hasn’t responded in the promised time, a courteous follow-up letter is in order. Do not call or fax the editor.

SASE
A self-addressed, stamped envelope for the return of your material. For foreign publishers, you may be required to use foreign postage as US postage will not be valid. Check with your post office for information.

Tearsheets
Originally this term referred to pages torn out of a magazine or newspaper containing your printed work, a review of your work, a reference to your work, or all of the above. Today photocopies of these are often used instead of originals.

Unsolicited Manuscript
A manuscript sent without prior authorization. Magazines that do not take unsolicited manuscripts require that you query first and wait for a response. ☑️ www.cricketmag.submittable.com/submit/17820/cicada-magazine-for-ages-14

Email: cicada@cicadamedia.com
CONTACT: Submissions Editor
GUIDELINES: www.cricketmag.com/submissions
DESCRIPTION: Themed nonfiction magazine that explores science, art, and nature (9 issues per year).
AGE GROUP: 3-7
ACCEPTS: Click presents nonfiction concepts to young children through a variety of formats: articles, photo essays & stories. Articles & photo essays (200-400 words) should explain the how & why of something in a friendly, engaging, humorous way. Prefer informal, conversational style; best articles tackle one idea or concept in-depth rather than several ideas superficially. Stories (600-1,000 words) should contain and explain nonfiction concepts within them; successful stories often show children engaged in finding out about their universe with the help of supportive, but not all-knowing, adults.
TEMS: Rates vary. Payment after publication. Rights vary.
COMMENTS: Click themes introduce children to ideas and concepts within the natural, physical, or social sciences; the arts; technology; math; and history. The goal is to allow young children access to the world of ideas and knowledge in an age-appropriate yet challenging way. Articles and stories are commissioned. Please see theme list and writers guidelines at www.cricketmag.com/submissions. Authors must provide bibliography, listing all resource materials and notes as the sources of facts and information given.

CONTACT: Melissa Norkin, Editor
DESCRIPTION: Bimonthly educational publication. Formerly Dolphin Log.
AGE GROUP: 7-12
ACCEPTS: No fiction! No talking animals! No first-person accounts or articles by children! Wants nonfiction articles (features 500-700 words; shorter pieces to 250 words) about science, nature, marine biology, ecology, environment. Also interested in “games based on scientific fact, original home science experiments, and art projects that are related to an ocean theme.” Query first! Unsolicited mss will be returned unread. Illustrations must be realistic. Will review artwork for assignment if queried.
TERMS: Pays $100-$300 for features and $15-$100 for shorter pieces on publication and buys one-time rights. Query for photo submissions and rates. Only duplicate slides accepted.
COMMENTS: It “is not a good market for the beginning writer. Read at least 3 recent issues; 95% of submissions are rejected because the content or style is inappropriate for our publication.” Cousteau Kids is photo-oriented, but also needs illustrators, especially with biology background. Needs range from simple but also needs illustrators, especially with the lead you expect to put on the article; make it catchy—grab our attention!” Allow 4 to 6 weeks for response.

GUIDELINES: www.edta.org/publications/writers_guidelines.asp
DESCRIPTION: Educational theater magazine published September - May.
AGE GROUP: High School
ACCEPTS: Articles (800-4,000 words), interviews, surveys, photo spread with copy, book reviews, humor pieces. Plays (one-act and full-length, unpublished; performable in high schools; no children’s theater pieces, teen angst dramas or overtly didactic “message” plays). Finished ms should conform to Chicago Manual of Style. Submit any photos and/or illustrations with article. High-res JPEGs preferred; color transparencies, 35mm+, color or B&W prints (5x7 or larger), line art are also acceptable.
TERMS: Pays $25-$400 on acceptance for first publication rights. Buys one-time, non-exclusive publication rights to plays; playwright retains all other rights. Responds in 6 weeks.
COMMENTS: Prefers finished manuscript but will respond to queries. No phone or e-mail queries. Sample copy for $2.50. “What makes us cranky: writers too lazy or careless to do basic reporting and research; writers who represent themselves as experts when they’re not; would-be playwrights who do not understand the basic conventions of play script format or even the basic conventions of the stage.”
or movies. Interdisciplinary articles (up to 600 words) including activity that uses math that is relevant to story; could include graph reading activities, issues in the news; best when they have a kid-oriented slant.

TERMS: Pays $250+.

COMMENTS: Query first through mail. “The tone of DynaMath is casual. We aim to show kids that math can be fun and relevant to their lives. All the while, we remain true to the middle and upper elementary math curricula: place value; whole number addition, subtraction, multiplication, division; whole number conceptualization, addition and subtraction of fractions and decimals; chart and graph reading; measurement; geometry; problem-solving skills like using a logic line or classifying attributes; critical thinking; and other skills of similar difficulty levels.”

Email: eds@highlights-corp.com

CONTACT: Manuscript Coordinator

DESCRIPTION: General interest, ad-free monthly

AGE GROUP: 6-12

ACCEPTS: Crafts: should have concise, numbered directions, up to 5 steps. Should appeal to boys and girls

Puzzles: “should not require a reader to write in the magazine.” Current needs include math puzzles, code activities, and visual puzzles

Cartoons: can be single-panel or multiple-panel, black-and-white or full-color, with or without a caption, and with either human or animal characters.

Nonfiction: can include science, arts, sports, how-to’s, world cultures, history, What a Pro Knows articles, and Gallant Kids articles.

Fiction: should have an engaging plot, strong characterization, a specific setting, and lively language.

Verse: purchased sparingly at the moment.

However, if you’d like to submit poetry, it should be appealing to kids and no longer than about 16 lines.

TERMS: Buys all rights, pays on acceptance $150+ for fiction/nonfiction, $25+ for crafts, $25+ for finger plays/action rhymes, $25+ for verse, $40+ for puzzles. Cartoons: $40 for BW, $50+ for color Responds in 4-6 weeks, longer if holding for consideration.

COMMENTS: Accepts mss year round, including seasonal material. Prefers mss to queries. Highlights is a secular magazine “dedicated to helping kids grow in basic skills and knowledge, creativeness, ability to think and reason, sensitivity to others, high ideals and worthy ways of living.”

HIGHLIGHTS HIGH FIVE

www.highlights.submitable.com/submit
Email: ikhayes@highlightsfive.com

CONTACT: Kathleen Hayes, Editor

DESCRIPTION: The magazine is designed to be shared by child and parent (or other skilled reader), but we are also keeping the text short and the readability low so that good first and second grade readers can read it independently.

AGE GROUP: Ages 2-6 and their parents

ACCEPTS: Stories are 150 words or less. Poems typically 1-3 stanzas. We are buying stories from freelance writers with a proven track record who can successfully write for young children. Most of the nonfiction features are either written in-house, or commissioned, although we have and will publish some nonfiction articles by freelance writers.

TERMS: Watch website guidelines for updated information.

COMMENTS: “I want to stress that we are not currently seeking manuscripts from folks unless they have published a number of things for this age group.”

In the religious book market you will discover a vast number of writing opportunities, including, but not limited to, publishers for board books, picture books, activity books, riddle books, puzzle books, devotionals, biographies, story collections, easy readers, workbooks, textbooks, poetry, journals, curriculum materials, Bible story retellings, plays, puppet skits, value tests, and contemporary problems with Biblically-based solutions, etc.

Some publishers are associated with a specific denomination while others are nondenominational. Some only utilize writers of the same faith while others will publish work submitted by a writer of any faith. Some will take simultaneous submissions while others will only accept exclusive submissions. Some publishers are looking for series ideas while others want a great single title book. Besides reading the information presented in this booklet, send for the publisher’s guidelines, familiarize yourself with their catalog, and go to your local bookstore and see firsthand what types of books they are currently publishing. Does the publisher you are about to submit your polished manuscript to want Bible passages quoted directly or implied value concepts?

Think about working as a volunteer with the ages of children you are writing for. Your experiences may give you several writing ideas. If you have not already done so, join a local writers group in your area. You can swap guidelines, publications, and critique each other’s manuscripts. Through your networking, you may find out about a publisher who is compiling a collection of short stories, poems, retold Bible stories, etc. and submit your work to them for possible publication.

Publishers are looking to fill needs in people’s lives with books from freelancers. They want strong writing with memorable characters as well as a theme or message woven into the manuscript, not a lesson tacked on at the end.

It is a good idea to do your homework by visiting websites and looking at catalogs. Remember: Always include a SASE with enough postage for return!

RESTRICTIONS OR TABOOS: All our publications must be biblically based and developmentally appropriate for children.
Writing for educational publishers can include a variety of assignments, such as leveled readers, curriculum-related books, teacher resources, and ancillary materials. Writers must have a solid understanding of national educational standards and age-level appropriateness. Classroom teaching experience is a real advantage. A strong background in science, math, or history is also a plus.

Before contacting the publishers listed in this guide, visit their websites. Studying their online catalogs will help you gain a solid understanding of each company’s product line and specific needs. Once you have identified a few publishers with offerings that seem to match your experience and interests, submit a brief letter of introduction, a resume, and relevant clips (writing samples from previous projects) or non-returnable illustration samples. Only send proposals, manuscripts, or book dummies if they are requested. See each company’s author and/or illustrator guidelines for more details.

Educational publishing projects often require intense work over short periods of time. Be sure that kind work is appropriate for your schedule and lifestyle. Educational publisher typically offer work-for-hire contracts with a flat fee as payment.

SCBWI

DIRECTORIES & RESOURCES
The Society of Children’s Book Writers & Illustrators’ Agents Directory should not be used as a substitute for agents’ submission guidelines, but is intended to be used as a reference guide. The listings include both literary agents and artist representatives. A survey was conducted through a questionnaire requesting current submission procedures in order to provide up-to-date information.

The process of finding a good agent is quite a challenge for children’s book writers or illustrators. Many literary agents specifically do not represent children’s books. We hope then that this directory will facilitate your search for representation. As with every other aspect of the children’s book business, a writer or illustrator should act professionally. Seek advice from more experienced writer or illustrator friends. In addition, it will be in your best interest to carefully read the entries in this publication and to follow the procedures indicated. For instance, most agents will only look at multiple query letters, not multiple manuscripts.

All correspondence with an agent should be accompanied by a self-addressed stamped envelope (SASE). Also, you should always keep a copy of your manuscript and/or art samples. Do not send original art and unpublished material unless specifically requested to do so by an agent.

THE AGENT’S JOB

In general, an agent advises you about your work’s potential, markets the work to publishers, negotiates your contracts, and protects your interests on many different levels. The agent should be knowledgeable about current trends, practices, and conditions in the industry. The agent reviews royalty statements, exploits rights that you have reserved (foreign, film, merchandising, etc.), and collects and disburses the money owed to you.

An agent cannot sell an unsellable manuscript or inappropriate artwork. Also, an agent cannot make basic, personal decisions about your writing, which only you can make. An agent works with you, but does not do your work for you. You are the most important factor in your writing career, not the agent.

Some agents are more flexible than others are. Some on this list, as indicated, are willing to let clients do their own marketing (i.e., make their own sales) and will then negotiate the contract for a specified fee or commission. Such an arrangement must be worked out in advance, as must any other special circumstance you desire.

CHOOSING AN AGENT

Not all agents are created equal. Again, it is in your best interest to research an agent as much as possible before contacting him/her. You will want to take at least the same amount of care as you would in choosing a lawyer, doctor, or plumber. Word of mouth is one legitimate way of learning an agent’s reputation. Anyone can set him or herself up and do business as a literary agent. Many, but not all, reputable agents belong to the Association of Author’s Representatives, Inc. (AAR), as indicated in this list. The AAR is a not-for-profit organization that sets professional standards and requires members to subscribe to its Canon of Ethics. For example, the AAR officially discourages the practice of charging fees for reading and evaluating submissions. Agents who charge reading fees have been so indicated in this list. Please note that the SCBWI believes agents should make money from selling your work, not from charging fees.

Choosing an agent is a highly individual decision, and some factors will be more important to you than others. Choose carefully! The choice you make will affect you longer than even your choice of a mate. You will be tied to that agent for the life of the contract he/she negotiates for you (a period which, in the case of books that stay in print a long time, could extend past your death).

You will want to evaluate this list with an eye toward which factors are most important to you:

» Does the agency specifically represent the type of material you write or illustrate?
» Are the agency’s commission and expenses in line with what you are looking for?
» Has the agency been in business a long time or is it relatively new? (Both can have advantages.)
» Who are its current clients?
» Is the agency based in New York or in your geographic area?
» Does the agent offer editorial guidance before submitting manuscripts to publishers?
DO YOU NEED AN AGENT?

This is an important question you will want to consider before you begin contacting agents. Many successful children’s writers and illustrators do not have agents, preferring to control all aspects of their careers. And most editors will tell you that children’s books, unlike adult books, is one area where manuscripts are read whether agented or not. In other words, with the majority of publishers, it is not necessary to have an agent to get published. For an unpublished writer, in fact, it can be just as difficult to find an agent as to sell your first book, and the energy might be better spent in perfecting one’s craft and researching the market on your own.

The advantages to having an agent are complex. Ideally, you will be in a relationship of mutual confidence and trust, with someone who can perform many services in helping you build your career. The author-agent relationship depends on your needs, the nature of your work, and the agent’s policies and practices. If you wish, you can keep your relationship on a dollars-and-cents level, and rely on the agent only when financial negotiations are taking place. Or you may need editorial guidance in addition to business support, and you will look to your agent as a consultant in developing your work. Some writers need emotional support on top of all that, looking to the agent as a steady source of encouragement in an often difficult business, where editors can change frequently. The agent can be a helpful problem-solver, and, in particular, can act as a buffer between you and your editor(s), taking care of business while you focus on your work. The agent’s time and effort frees your brain for creative endeavors. Therefore, finding an agent who meets all or some of these needs may take time, but it can be well worth it.

ALTERNATIVES TO GETTING AN AGENT

If talking about money doesn’t bother you, and you feel that an agent might be just one more barrier between you and your readers, then you may decide that representing yourself is your best bet. Many writers will agree that anyone smart enough to write and sell a book is smart enough to negotiate his/her own contract. Certainly most writers started out this way; it is difficult to get taken on by an agent until you have sold your first few books yourself.

The main advantage to not having an agent is simple: you get to keep all of your money, instead of paying 15% (the average commission on domestic sales over the life of the book) to an agent. An agent, especially one with whom you’re not happy, can also get in the way between you and an editor, especially one with whom you have great rapport or a relationship of long standing. Some writers with agents spend much time complaining about them—time that could be more creatively spent elsewhere. The wrong agent for you can be worse than having no agent.

Finally, one compromise between signing on with an agent and doing without is to hire a literary lawyer—not just any lawyer, but one familiar with the publishing industry, who regularly represents authors in contract negotiations with publishers. Instead of charging a commission, such lawyers bill their clients by the hour. Paying your bill ends the expense. If you do your own marketing and merely want an attorney’s help with the contract, you will want to research this option further. The Authors Guild recommends literary lawyers and similar information is available in the Literary Market Place.

Whatever you decide—to seek representation by an agent, the advice of a literary lawyer, or to market and negotiate on your own behalf—remember to be professional in your approach and always include an SASE with any correspondence.

Adriana has a long trajectory of publishing underrepresented authors and illustrators, and welcomes submissions that offer diverse points of view.

Taylor Martindale is actively acquiring fiction and non-fiction projects. She began agenting with the Sandra Dijkstra Literary Agency and is a graduate of The College of William and Mary, where she studied English and Hispanic Studies. Taylor is looking for young adult fiction, literary middle grade fiction, and select non-fiction projects. She is interested in finding unique and unforgettable voices in contemporary, historical and/or multicultural novels. When considering non-fiction projects, Taylor uses much the same approach, and hopes to find authors with fresh ideas and perspectives, with writing that is accessible, entertaining, and compelling.

Stefanie von Borstel has almost 20 years of experience in children’s books publishing. Prior to agenting, she worked in editorial and marketing with Penguin and Harcourt. Stefanie is interested in stand-out picture books, chapter books, middle grade novels and nonfiction books for all ages. She is honored to work with talented writers and artists that have been awarded Pura Belpre Honors, ALA Notable Children’s Books, the Christopher Award, NCTE Orbis Pictus, the Agatha Award, and the Charlotte Zolotow Award.

LAURENS R. SCHWARTZ

New York, NY 10010-5315

Established: 1982

Contact Name: Laurens R. Schwartz

Agent For: PB, fiction, nonfiction

Preferred Clients: Published/unpublished

Commission: 15% text domestic, art up to 25%

Reading Fees: None

Other Fees: Photocopying (specified in agency agreement; the agreement tells how to avoid it)

Rep Agreement: Written contract, can be terminated at will

Multiple Submissions: No

Submission Procedure: Letter of inquiry with 1–3 page proposal or synopsis of project, c.v. or resume, and SASE.

Other Comments: Willing to work with authors who do own marketing. I work with my writers/artists to develop long-term goals, including the development of a “name” through promotional techniques. I am a severe critic. Writing must be (or eventually be) in publishable form; art/illustration must be perfect (no smears, stray lines, 12th century hands/feet perspective). I am the “first” line editor/critic. Also, will work with artists/illustrators on other outlets (galleries, CD-ROM, etc.) after placing something “large,” i.e., picture book.

In today’s digital marketplace, it seems everyone is writing a book. With the ease of publishing through print-on-demand platforms, publishers are popping up like acne on a teenager, and some of them are just as puss-filled. So what’s an aspiring author to do? Some things are easy to figure out, like that you don’t EVER work with a publisher that is charging you for ANY service, be it editing, marketing, or buying books prior to print. Others are harder to read, hidden behind fancy promises, compliments, and vague contracts.

CAVEAT EMPTOR

To be on the safe side, you want to investigate an independent publisher before you submit. You can check their website to see who they have published, where, what awards they’ve acquired, and other information such as how long they’ve been in business (usually given away by the date at the bottom of their website). Other places to check out are:

Absolute Write – This is the “water cooler” of the writer’s world. Everything you need to know is discussed here. http://absolutewrite.com/forums/activity.php

Writer Beware – Another must is Writer Beware, a place to discover literary scams, schemes and pitfalls. This site is sponsored by the Science Fiction & Writers of America. http://accrispin.blogspot.com/

LET’S LOOK AT THE MATH

On average, a paperback book selling for $9.95 on Amazon will net the author $1.75 in royalties. An ebook can earn nearly twice as much (and cost zero dollars to publish). So let’s say you earn $3.00 per book. The average indie author can expect to sell 50 copies of their book over the lifetime of the title. At two bucks a pop, you’re looking at expecting to make a whopping $150.00 on your book. An author working their business every day can expect to sell nearly 600 a year, which is still just $1800.00 . . . per year.

Yes, you can increase your sales price to increase your profit, but if the competition, whose name the consumer already knows, is selling a similar book for under $10, then you’d better be close in price to compete. Keep in mind:

Your book production must be equal to the Big 5 publishers to include professional editing, cover and interior formatting.

You must invest in your book, just like a publisher because you ARE the publisher.

If you look at your cover and it doesn’t look like it can sit side by side with books on the NY Times Bestseller’s list, then why bother? Why would you want to produce a sub-par product? All that does is saturate the market and drive down prices. If you haven’t invested in a professional editor, your book gives every indie published book a disadvantage, especially those authors who have invested time and money to be professional.

To Publish or Not to Publish

When making the decision to become your own publisher, you must understand one hard fact: you are opening a business. I know, catch your breath . . . breathe in, breathe out. Whether you like it or not, you are now an entrepreneur of a fabulous new company that sells a product. This product is your book. If you have an entrepreneurial spirit, you will find a most rewarding and challenging experience awaits you. If not, you may waste a lot of time and money for disappointment. The truth is that you must hustle and sell your book, regardless of your status with a big house, small press, or self-published venue. Most businesses fail within the first year, so you have to know that you must work your business for a solid year before you should expect to see a profit. You must be willing to:

Put in 40-60 hours a week working toward building a client base

Study the industry

Generate leads

Service your customers (fans)

Invest to grow

You must purchase sales tools such as business cards, postcards, posters, marketing freebies, and books in advance to giveaway. Books on hand will always sell faster than books that must be ordered. Bottom line, you will become the publisher, distributor, sales force and marketing/publicity team, in addition to the creative writer and editing pro you are already. You must also—depending on your budget—become a formatter, cover designer and booking agent. It’s tireless, left brain work that makes creative thinking more difficult; however, when publicity works and doors open, the feeling of knowing that you and you alone made it happen, pushes you through to the next milestone. But you have to continually work your business. The work you do today will pay off in three months, so if you stop now, you won’t have an income next quarter. Remember, most businesses fail in their first year and take twice as long to make a profit.

READY, SET, GO!

Here’s a breakdown of the publishing process and what you can expect to pay to self-publish your novel:

Editing: $550-$1500 depending on quality of draft
Formatting: $200-$300
ISBN: Free-$25
Barcode: $25
Copyright: $35
Cover: $25-? depending on where you get the image or if it’s created by an artist (average $350)
Marketing material: Ongoing fees for bookmarks, stickers, business cards, website, sell sheets (a must have!), book talker, book trailer, swag for giveaways, postcards, etc. ($50-$100 a month average)
Promotional tools: Ongoing and monthly fees for newsletter management, social media funneling, subscriptions, continued education
Books: $2.50-$6.00 for print-on-demand, based off page count and much higher if in color
Reviews: Varies, but shouldn’t be more than the price of a book and less than $10
Book launch: From $50-$500, depending
Awards & Contests: Varies and should be researched for reputation before submitting

You will also need to apply for a state sales and use tax ID to collect sales tax on all books sales, which you will need to pay quarterly or be fined hefty fees. And if you are planning on doing author visits, you will need to get fingerprinted through the state ($100) and apply for insurance ($600 per year).

WHAT NOW?

Congratulations! You’ve opened a business and have your first product: your book. It’s time to share it with the world. The most important thing you can do is to create your brand. This is a complex and organic process that is best described as your unique contribution to the literary community. Once you figure that out, you can begin to market your book effectively to the right audience with the desired results every time. I could write an entire book on marketing, so I’ll just highlight a few ideas:

People love swag, so have stickers, candy, book themed jewelry, stuffed animals, coloring pages, and other items related to your book available to sell or give away.

Collect names at every event you attend. They will become the base for your mailing list. You can expect a higher conversion rate (up to 50% or more) from these followers verses Facebook fans or Twitter followers.

Spend as little as possible. Weigh your options and set a budget. Be sure to put money back into your business, which should have its own bank account and tax ID, as a legal entity.

Find social issues in your book that you can use to establish your brand. If everyone is selling a book these days, what sets you apart from the pack? Find that niche that makes you special in the marketplace and become an expert in that area.

Consider additional products in your line such as audiobooks, translations, television, film, stage, book clubs, foreign publishers, and novellas that expand your characters or your story world for your fans. Be assertive and think outside the box.

Don’t forget, it will take hard work and perseverance to find success. There is no magic formula. Nor is there a one-size-fits-all approach to independent publishing that will make you an overnight best-selling author, no matter what some blogs may promise. You need to be smart and investigate everything for yourself. Be vigilant. Study the market and the industry to educate yourself and avoid the many scam artists who prey off author’s dreams of being published. Finally, remember that the ones who make it never gave up. Now get out there and make it happen! 😊

Book producers, also known as book packagers, provide all the services necessary for publication except sales and order fulfillment. Many traditional publishers hand over the production process of complex books that involve a large volume of reference work, illustrations and/or deal with a specific subject in great detail to book producers.

Most book producers, especially in the juvenile book market, cater to reference books and information books (nonfiction). Some book producers also produce series fiction, novelty books and commercial merchandise based on popular books.

Book packagers conceive and pitch a project to publishers who would be interested in the project. In some cases, publishers would have a specific idea in mind and would shop around for the best possible book production house that can take the project from concept to finished product.

In this directory, you will find information about book producers in the USA and UK who have expressed interest in working with freelancers—both illustrators and writers. At the end is a list of recent statuses from other production houses on their submission policies. When you are writing to a book producer, please do not fail to review and follow the recent guidelines on the company websites. You can also find more details at www.abpaonline.org.

This directory is intended to help SCBWI members market their published work to readers by getting their books reviewed. It is not a comprehensive listing of all reviewers, but does include many who wished to be listed, including both print and online reviewers.

When deciding to whom you should send your book, consider the types of books they review and the publications or sites where the review will appear. Circulation and page view figures for the various outlets are estimates. They are meant to give you an idea of how many people may read the reviews in each publication.

Pay attention to what each reviewer wants. Some reviewers prefer to receive press releases and not copies of books. Others never review picture books or fantasy titles. Some reviewers need copies of the book in a timely manner and would like to receive galleys because they must review a book closer to when it is released. Others are less timely but still must have the book within the year it is published. Many reviewers give priority to authors or books with a connection to their geographical region. If the bio on your book doesn’t tell people where you are from and there is a connection, let the reviewer know! Send them what they want and there is a better chance that your book will be included in a review.

Once you have submitted your material, it is out of your hands. Even if a reviewer enjoys your book, they may not be able to include it in a review. Word counts are limited, and entire columns may be canceled due to overall space limitations within a publication. The book may also have to meet the tastes and standards of the editor and publisher as well as the individual reviewer.

Unless otherwise indicated, don’t expect the reviewer to return your book to you. After reading your book, a reviewer may donate it to a local school or as a door prize at a writer’s conference.

At the end of this listing, several means of publicity other than reviewers are provided. Even if you cannot find an eligible reviewer within these pages, these additional resources may help you publicize your work. If a contact has included their phone number, only call during normal business hours. Treat them with the same courtesy and professionalism you would treat an editor. Remember that they, too, want to help authors reach young readers.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION: I expect much of a book. If it sets out to tell a story, real or fictional, I expect to be carried along with style and skill. I appreciate innovation, admire creativity, but “new” and “unusual” aren’t sufficient criteria. The real test is whether a book does its job. Does it tell the story? Does it create its world or explain its subject? Does it introduce me to a new way of seeing something familiar or a rare glimpse of something exotic? I expect even more style, wit, and skill from writers addressing a young audience; children are discerning, sensitive readers, training themselves to appreciate literature. This audience deserves the very best writing. I reject the notion that our culture is post-literate and the fiction that we are a nation of boobs. As a writer and as a reviewer, I insist on respect for a reading audience that is remarkably sophisticated, informed, and curious.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION: As a lifelong reader, my goal is to forge more lifelong readers, both at home and at school. The mother of three boys, I’m proud to call them my bookworms. Because I know how boy readers tick (I’ve seen the transformation from avid listener to graphic novel gobber to voracious reader of any text in my home), I’m confident in directing my students on their own paths of reading identity. I’ve taught first, third, fourth, and fifth grades. The 2011–2012 school year found me teaching (gulp) seventh grade English language arts. And yes, I actually wanted to teach this particular age group. You see, it’s my hope to still spread my love and enthusiasm for the written word, but with a little more sarcasm and a dash of patience. Discovering who you really are in a body that is constantly in flux is challenging, after all.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION: Litland.com is the first service to review children’s and young adult fiction against a criteria based upon character education guidelines. We endeavor to illuminate books whose characters demonstrate . . . well, good character! Relying upon the psychological and social sciences, which inform of healthy moral and cognitive lifespan development, stories must focus on the nature of the protagonist's relationships, dilemma, and/or situation in a manner that exemplifies healthy choices and selfless behavior. As such, storylines that distract with unnecessary hedonism or aggression are not reviewed. Our website is designed for families to choose books based upon their own value system, a process which we call Do-Re-Mi. Book reviews link to a blog with commentary on the book, allowing general discussion about it. Litland.com is also a teaching resource for classroom and homeschool instruction, highlighting books and resources that will aid in character development of students. As such, reviews provide suggestions as to the use of books in many settings. We also provide parent and teacher activities and links to free resources, which can be very useful for tying the book into a homeschool or classroom curriculum.

TYPES OF BOOKS: Books for young readers that are of special interest to Jewish feminists

REVIEWS SELF-PUBLISHED MATERIAL: Yes

REVIEWS EBOOKS: No

REVIEWS MATERIAL THE SEASON IT IS RELEASED: Not necessarily

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION: We have always reviewed some books for young readers in our quarterly Jewish feminist magazine (we also review adult books). Since 1996, in our fall issue we have had a special feature on books for young readers. We usually do a feature related to children’s books, such as this year’s roundup of readers remembering reading The Diary of Anne Frank, or last year’s children’s book author roundup on “How Books Share the World’s Bad News with Kids”; not necessarily your standard reviews. REVIEWS FOR: The Baytown Sun, local daily paper; Galveston County Daily News; The Houston Banner; Review of Texas Books, Lamar University quarterly librarians; newsletter; Sterling Municipal Library, Baytown’s public library, asked me to write two- to three-hundred-word reviews of both new and award-winning children’s books for parents, grandparents, and teachers. The reviews are published weekly in the Lifestyle section of the Baytown Sun.

DURATION: Twelve years

TYPES OF BOOKS: All books; mostly picture books or short middle grade and YA; contemporary, historical, humor; no fantasy, cross culture; very few nonfiction; I review the books that fit into what I am writing.

REVIEWS SELF-PUBLISHED MATERIAL: Yes

REVIEWS APPS: No

REVIEWS MATERIAL THE SEASON IT IS RELEASED: Yes, as soon as possible after I receive the book

LEAD TIME FOR PUBLICATION: Varies with newspaper space

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION: I write a review of the book, not a critique. I am especially interested in encouraging writers and making schools and libraries aware that new writers are out there and deserve their consideration. Adult readers have been very complimentary, saying that my reviews make them want to read the books. After the review is published, I send a published copy, along with permission to use it in any promotional material, to the author or publisher. I love receiving beautiful books to be reviewed, but usually am six to eight books behind. Writing a review teaches me how to assess my own writing, and I gain a contact with the publisher. When the books stack up, I share them with school libraries and public libraries and offer them as door prizes at SCBWI conferences. Please send an SASE so I can send a copy of the review. Please e-mail me and ask if I can review your book. I will respond quickly.

The SCBWI Directory of International Schools helps connect SCBWI authors, illustrators and translators who do school visits with interested international schools around the world. The Directory lists international schools that feature (or plan to feature) author and illustrator (and occasionally translator) visits. Each year the submission period for schools to submit data for the Directory is April 1 to June 1. Librarians at international schools worldwide are encouraged to submit info for their schools. International schools worldwide wishing to submit data should visit www.scbwi.org and under “Find a Speaker”, click on “About School Visits”, then click on “Submit International School Visit Information.”

International schools usually embrace a global outlook. The community of an international school—the administrators, faculty, students and families—typically includes members of many different cultures, languages and belief systems. The approach to education tends to be truly international. Some international schools follow the International Baccalaureate (IB) programs, including the IB Primary Years Program, the IB Middle Years Program, and the IB Diploma Program. Some international schools follow the national curriculum of a particular country, such as the Australian Schools and British Schools. Some international schools include many students of the local culture, whereas other international schools are forbidden by local law from accepting local students. In countries such as South Korea, international schools may be composed almost entirely of students from the local culture studying in English. Some international schools are aligned with a particular religious faith. Most international schools are located in or near major cities.

The information in this Directory was contributed by librarians at the international schools listed. The SCBWI hopes that this Directory of International Schools will continue to grow, and that this Directory, combined with the Guide to International School Visits, ultimately will benefit schools, authors, illustrators, and children worldwide.

Authors, Illustrators and Translators: Please see also the SCBWI Guide to International School Visits. Besides reading the information in the Guide and this Directory, be sure to check individual school websites.

Listings of international schools may also be found on the following sites:

» Council of International Schools (International Schools Directory) www.cois.org
» International Schools Service (Directory of International Schools) www.iss.edu
» East Asia Regional Council of International Schools (Member Schools) www.earcos.org

Note: For the below SCBWI Directory of International School listings, “percent native English speakers” refers to the estimated percentage of native English speaking students at the school; “other languages taught” refers to languages besides English taught at the school.

Compiled by SCBWI regional advisors, the Writing & Illustration Courses Directory lists institutions that offer courses, regularly or occasionally, in writing or illustrating for young readers. There may be other courses than those listed here. Members seeking courses in areas where none are listed should contact local institutions.

The 2010-2011 edition of this list has been updated with phone numbers and/or websites for each listing. Further details, course descriptions, costs and registration deadlines are readily available online for most of the classes listed below. Programs that have contacted us with information are listed in more complete detail. Finally, while we encourage you to hone and sharpen your craft by taking a class, this listing is not a recommendation or endorsement of any specific institution or course.

The Solstice Low-Residency MFA in Creative Writing Program enables students to focus on fiction, poetry, creative nonfiction, and writing for children & young adults. Cross-genre study is available and supported. The two-year program features 10-day residencies each winter (start of spring term) and summer (start of fall term) when students and faculty members are on campus; during the semesters in between, students work one-on-one from home via mail and email with a faculty mentor. During each 10-day residency, select craft classes—including classes in writing for young adults and writing for children—are available for audit by members of the public. Visit www.pmc.edu/mfa for more information.

WRITING FOR CHILDREN
Online course taught by Carol Parenzan Smalley is good for credit at over 2400 colleges and universities around the world. A new section starts each month and runs for 6 weeks.
A wealth of information is available to writers and illustrators in libraries, bookstores, and on the Internet. Some valuable resources are out of print but can still be found in libraries and in used bookstores. Good reference resources are available free of charge on Internet websites or as part of commercial databases, some of which are costly. Libraries often provide patrons free access to fee-based databases. This listing includes general reference sources and subject- and genre-specific sources, both in print and online. Appended to this publication are two essays you may find useful: “Using Historical Associations Effectively” by Alexis O’Neill and “Tips for Researching a Culture Different from Your Own” by Sherry Garland.

Making the Invisible Woman Visible
Scott, Anne Firor
University of Illinois, 1995
Essays by leading contemporary historians and feminists, each speaking to some aspect of making women's stories the stuff of history, and dealing with possible interpretations of women's status at various times in our history and of women's impact on our history. Especially helpful to our work is her introductory section: “The Biographical Mode.”

Merriam-Webster’s New Biographical Dictionary
Merriam-Webster, 1995
Thorough and accurate check for spellings and dates. Brief but precise description of biographical subject, his or her work and background.

New York Times Book Review
An unusual but helpful (and interesting) source when working on biographies. Send an “Author’s Query” notice to the New York Times Book Review, 229 W. 43rd St., New York, NY 10036, and ask the public for direct knowledge or anecdotes: “For a biography on [Mr. X], anyone having information or personal knowledge, please contact [your name and address].”

Notable American Women: A Biographical Dictionary
Ware, Susan, editor
Harvard University Press, 2005
Encyclopedia of women of achievement in American history; an indispensable source of biographies not easily found elsewhere. Each entry (over 1,300 in all) has been written by a scholar especially knowledgeable on the subject, and each contains a valuable list of sources at the end of the article.

Telling Lives: The Biographer’s Art
Pachter, Marc, ed.
University of Pennsylvania Press, 1981
A collection of essays by the best modern biographers (Edel, Tuchman, Kazin, Kaplan and others) on the art of telling lives. Many views, all worth consideration, of how to effectively capture and convey the human story.

Rand McNally’s Pioneer Atlas of the American West
Rand McNally, 1956
Found only in university or larger libraries. Fifty-one pages of railroad maps and brief summaries of advertisements and descriptions of the western lands of 1870-1890.

A Short History of the American Revolution
Stokesbury, James L.
William Morrow and Co., 1991
A brief, very readable, one-volume history of the American Revolution that looks at the issues leading up to the conflict: the politics and personalities of the major players on both sides, as well as the battlefield action and strategies. Comprehensive bibliography.

The Shaping of America: A People’s History of the Young Republic
Smith, Page
McGraw-Hill, 1980
An in-depth portrait of American history’s formative years. Depicts not only an era of progress and expansion but also a time of turmoil and disorder, closing with the deaths of Jefferson and Adams on July 4, 1826.

Slave Narratives: A Folk History of Slavery in the US from Interviews with Former Slaves
American Guide Serv., 1989
(reprint of 1941 WPA ed.)
What it was like to live as a slave, from testimonies of the people who lived it. Original manuscript in the Rare Book and Special Collections Division of Library of Congress. Microfilm, Microfiche, facsimile editions available.

To Be a Slave
Lester, Julius
Scholastic, 1968
First person accounts of African-Americans enslaved before the Civil War, recorded originally in the Federal Writer’s Project in the 1930s.

Women’s Diaries of the Westward Journey
Schlissel, Lillian
Schocken, 1982
This compilation of diaries, letters, and information about the westward trek is invaluable. Schlissel’s meticulous research and feminist perspective give new insight into historical material and the reality of women’s routines, losses, and delights on the frontier.

USING HISTORICAL ASSOCIATIONS EFFECTIVELY

by Alexis O’Neill | California—Ventura/Santa Barbara Regional Advisor

Historical associations can hold unimaginable treasures for you—if you know how to access them. What it takes is a little homework, focused searching and appropriate research etiquette.

DO YOUR HOMEWORK

Before you even think about using specialized collections, read everything you can on and around your subject. You won’t want to waste time reading general sources at the historical association (HA) site where hours and staff time are limited. Instead, use the HA to dig for unique sources of information.

Understand how historical associations work. The HAs I’m most familiar with have boards of directors, small (under) paid staffs, and as many volunteers as they can find. These associations collect and save information for either a town, city, county or state, depending on their mission. Research facilities vary widely. I’ve worked in multi-storied centers, but I’ve also taken notes in a closet on top of a file cabinet. Typically, though, the HA will have a room with library tables that can accommodate maps and oversize materials. Seating goes to the first ones to arrive. Hours vary but are usually restricted.

Try to be knowledgeable about the collection. A phone call to the HA, a brochure or inquiry at the local library can tell you what the collection may focus on. For example, Cornell University published what is nicknamed the Red Book Guide, a series which lists historical resources by county throughout New York State. Studying documents like these ahead of time might give you new leads to explore—or may steer you away from collections that might not be profitable to your project.

Understand that most historical associations today collect only those items that help interpret the life and times of that specific region. The more familiar you are with the region, the more efficient your searching will be.

FOCUS YOUR SEARCH

Advance notice can be useful. If you’re traveling a distance to the HA, you might want to write a letter to the research librarian before you go. Tell what your project is about and list the key information you wish to research. This gives the HA time (if possible) to consider materials before you arrive. However, since some researchers never follow up on their requests, staff members usually don’t begin the search until you come and sign in. Your letter will serve as a useful guide at that time.

Know that retrieval systems vary. Typically, you won’t be allowed to browse the stacks like you can in a library. Staff will pull only what you request. Most HAs have their own unique system of filing materials, so you’ll be expected to use their card files, indexes and coding systems to locate appropriate topics. You’ll fill out a request form and a staff member will retrieve the material. Some materials may require a day or two to locate, so be prepared. All materials must be used on-site.

Prioritize your wish list. Request the most important materials first. Then look for those gems in the more obscure sources.

Use tools of the trade. Pens are poison to historical documents, so you will be asked to take notes in pencil. (The Bic or Scripto plastic mechanical pencils are great; points always stay sharp.) Oils from your hands make permanent marks. So, if you are handling original documents, artifacts, or photographs, you will probably be asked to wear white gloves. (Usually, HAs have a supply of these thin cotton coverings.) I have been in a few places that don’t require pencils and gloves, but believe me, once you understand why they’re so important, you’ll want to use them. These precautions keep items from being damaged, ruined or worn out over time.

Be a defensive note-taker. Remember those “unique” classifications systems each HA has? Whether you use note cards or sheets of paper, make a habit of documenting each source of information carefully. Besides the regular bibliographic data, I record the current date, where I am, and all the HA information I need to locate that specific item again. This might include the title on a file folder, the painted number on an artifact, the drawer from which it came—anything useful. This habit has paid off for me more than once.

Bring money for fees. Some HAs charge non-members to use their research facilities, others appreciate a donation. All HAs I’ve worked with charge a fee for photocopying material. Steel yourself: there’s usually a policy about what can be copied. Old books with fragile bindings are out; prepare to take notes. Photocopying is usually done by staff members as time permits. I have waited up to a week for some copies, but generally I receive them at the end of that day or the next.

About photographs: usually, if you want a copy just for reference, it will be done on the copier. However, if you want a duplicate photo on photographic paper, it will be sent to a specialist and will take time. The price of the photo is determined by how the researcher plans to use it. (There’s a higher fee if it is to be used in a book.) Ask for the HAs policy when you arrive.

APPLY PROPER RESEARCH ETIQUETTE

Don’t be a hit-and-run researcher. I’ve worked with HAs on both coasts. The worst nightmare consists of the “RV Raiders” who “drop by” and say, “Give me everything you have on the Smith family. Now.” Hurried researchers also do desperate things—like tear pages out of irreplaceable books or slipping photographs into their notebooks. This is criminal. People who do this are stealing history.

Be sensitive. Your research project is only one among thousands staff members address each year. Don’t expect them to chat about it with you. Don’t worry if they aren’t as excited as you are about what you find. Resist the temptation to share what you discover, no matter how juicy. It interrupts others in their work and takes staff away from other duties. They’ll read it in your book, anyway!

Give due credit and share the results. Always acknowledge HAs in your book for information and photos you use. And, if you can, send them a complimentary copy of your book. It will be a reference for future researchers. 🍒

TIPS FOR RESEARCHING A CULTURE DIFFERENT FROM YOUR OWN

by Sherry Garland

Immerse yourself in the culture.
» If possible, travel to the setting of your book to learn the weather, plants, animals, smells, sounds, colors, etc. of the country.
» If you cannot travel to the country itself, visit American subcultures. For example, if you cannot travel to China, then travel to San Francisco’s Chinatown to observe sights, sounds, and smells.
» Attend festivals, religious ceremonies, weddings, parties, etc.
» Eat at restaurants from that culture; shop at their grocery stores; learn how their foods look, smell, taste, and feel. Try to cook some of their more popular recipes.
» Watch their movies at theaters or rent movies at specialty stores; listen to their music; learn some of their language.

Get to know members of the culture; develop genuine friendships.
» Visit their homes. Eat their foods, obey their customs. Show respect and never mock their beliefs. Ask millions of questions about their homeland, customs, foods, clothes, languages, occupations, plants, animals, famous sights, etc.
» Ask them to explain certain activities, costumes, etc. at festivals, ceremonies, parties, or other functions.
» Learn their superstitions and beliefs.

Imagine you’re at a dinner party. The food? Your favorites. The guests? Some of the top authors, illustrators, and author/illustrators working in children’s literature today. We’re joined by a book seller, an agent, an art director, a lawyer, a few poets, and an editor. The conversation? Not their National Book Awards and Honors, SCBWI Golden Kite Awards, or Sid Fleischman Humor Awards; not their Caldecott Honors, or Geisel Medals, or New York Times best sellers; not even the moment when one of them published his three hundredth book for children.

What these more than twenty-five experts* are talking about are the books on craft that inspire them, that are must-reads, and that they recommend. You’re scrambling for a pen and paper, but relax—I’m your note-taker, and I’ve made some fantastic lists of their favorites.

It was fascinating to see so much crossover: books for writers recommended by illustrators, and books for illustrators that writers found essential. As Jane Yolen said, “If you can get into the head of an illustrator, you will write a more illustratable book.”

So sit back, sip your favorite drink, and picture yourself so much richer for all the information in these remarkable resources.

The Top Nine Recommended Books on Writing

These are the books that were on more than one short list. In fact, Bird by Bird won the race, with eight total recommendations!

Bird by Bird: Some Instructions on Writing and Life, by Anne Lamott (Anchor Books, 1995)

“Smart and fun. She gives permission to write badly.”

“Lamott uses laughter, tears, and practical advice (write shitty first drafts) to persuade readers they’re not alone in an admittedly crazy art/business.”

“I recommend this book to anyone who is involved in a creative process of any kind because it allows us to believe that we aren’t alone and that we aren’t crazy.”

“She talks about telling the truth—your truth, which I believe is the most important thing I can teach my students.”

“Invaluable and inspiring.”

On Writing: A Memoir of the Craft, by Stephen King (Scribner, 2000)

“Offers tough love, and he pulls no punches about the hard work and joys of writing.”

“The grown-up map to writing for . . . adults. YA writers are writing for adults-in-waiting, after all.”

“Smart and eye-opening.”

“Meet an old-school editor who supported writers and helped them through the revision process, filled with gems about the creative process.”

“It is reassuring to know that even the best authors struggled in the process of creating books that are now classics.”

“Ursula Nordstrom was a wicked-funny letter writer.”

“I’m constantly opening Harold’s book and gasping, ‘So, that’s how it works!’ For me, it’s essential.”

“Because it’s so clearly laid out and because I know Harold, and he knows whereof he speaks . . . and he is continually updating this book to keep current in this quickly changing landscape.”

Please know that any omissions to these lists are mine and mine alone. Having said that, my thanks to the experts who so kindly shared their recommendations: M. T. Anderson, Peter Brown, Priscilla Burris, Kathleen Duey, Terri Farley, Candace Fleming, Marla Frazee, Esther Hershenson, Bonnie Berry LaMon, David LaRochelle, Aileen Leijten, Alvina Ling, Katherine Linka, Laurent Linn, Mac McCool, Kate Messner, Ann Whitford Paul, Dan Santat, Ruta Sepetys, Melissa Sweet, Richard Jesse Watson, April Halprin Wayland, Tina Wexler, Mo Willems, Dan Yaccarino, and Jane Yolen.
Children’s Books and Their Creators: An Invitation to the Feast of Twentieth Century Children’s Literature, by Anita Silvey (Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, 1995)

“Belongs on every children’s book writer’s shelf. Readers meet the best of the best, especially of the last fifty years of the twentieth century—autors, illustrators, editors, formats, genres, in more than eight hundred well-written entries.”

The Forest for the Trees: An Editor’s Advice to Writers, by Betsy Lerner (Riverhead Trade, 2010)

“Useful, practical ways to understand and use various writing skills—and writing in general. I loved her clarity.”

Story: Substance, Structure, Style and the Principles of Screenwriting, by Robert McKee (ReganBooks, 1997)

“What he has to say about the way that character should influence plot is useful even to those who aren’t writing screenplays.”

“Young protagonists are all on a journey to change and grow and leave their old selves behind.”

“Clear and comprehensive with an excellent discussion of characterization.”

The Top Seven Recommended Books on Illustrating

These are the books that were on more than one short list. Writing with Pictures won the overall race, with a total of ten recommendations!

Writing with Pictures: How to Write and Illustrate Children’s Books, by Uri Shulevitz (Watson-Guptill, 1997)

“It’s great for stepping back and pondering the anatomy of a picture book and why we do what we do. The printing techniques and technologies have evolved quite a lot since this was written and illustrated, but the main elements of visual storytelling he covers apply to all books of any decade.”

“A must-have for anyone who is serious about developing their craft.”

Children’s Writer’s & Illustrator’s Market Book (Writer’s Digest Books, annual)

“A vitally important resource book, updated annually . . . Relevant articles inform, educate, advise, challenge, and inspire.”

“A comprehensive marketing resource, which includes current listings of publishers, magazines, agents and art reps, and more. (Earlier CWIM annuals should not be overlooked, as they are packed with timeless interviews with publishing pros.)”

“The best and most up-to-date source for information about the whole children’s book industry.”

Picture This: Perception and Composition, by Molly Bang (Bulfinch Press, 1991; retitled as Picture This: How Pictures Work, Chronicle Books, 2000)

“Provides fun, dynamic teaching throughout, from using simple forms we know well, such as triangles and horizontals, to the effect color can have on those forms and shapes. A great book for helping us see through artists’ eyes what can make for extraordinary images and compositions.”

“It makes us aware of intuitive principles of making pictures, many of which we already maybe do but have never consciously thought about before.”

“It’s like a master class in how to look at art, learn from the best, and think about your own storytelling in new ways.”

How to Draw Comics the Marvel Way, by Stan Lee and John Buscema (Touchstone, 1984)

“It gives most artists all the essential tools they need to study composition, design, and basic figure drawing.”

“There are at least five copies around my house and studio. I look at it not only as a bible for writing, but apply its wisdom to making art—say what you need to say as simply as possible.”

More Recommended Books on Writing

The Artist’s Way: A Spiritual Path to Higher Creativity, by Julia Cameron with Mark Bryan (G. P. Putnam’s Sons, 1992)

A twelve-week program to recover your creativity from a variety of blocks, replacing them with artistic confidence and productivity. From morning pages to artist dates to the importance of “filling the well,” this book is full of tools, exercises, and inspiration.

Alone with All That Could Happen: Rethinking Conventional Wisdom About the Craft of Fiction Writing, by David Jauss (Writer’s Digest Books, 2008)

“My all-time favorite craft book for so many reasons, just because David Jauss is brilliant and writes in a way that explains, details, amuses, and resonates.”
PUBLICIZING YOUR PUBLISHED WORK

remember them forever.”

An easy-to-follow guide to developing nonfiction stories and books, covering resources, ways to organize your research, markets, and nonfiction techniques used in history, biography, science and nature, how-to, and self-help.

Art and Fear: Observations on the Perils (and Rewards) of Artmaking, by David Bayles and Ted Orland (Image Continuum Press, 2001)

“The bottom line: it’s okay to be afraid. That’s part of making art. You just have to be brave, too.”

Written in an encyclopedic fashion to “show that biography has many . . . dimensions.”

By Cunning and Craft: Sound Advice and Practical Wisdom for Fiction Writers, by Peter Selgin (Writer’s Digest Books, 2007)

Characters and Viewpoint (Elements of Fiction Writing), by Orson Scott Card (Writer’s Digest Books, 2011)

“Some great visuals that really helped with distance (close-in/limited vs. distant) as well as pros/cons to POV choices.”

Characters, Emotion & Viewpoint: Techniques and Exercises for Crafting Dynamic Characters and Effective Viewpoints (Write Great Fiction), by Nancy Kress (Writer’s Digest Books, 2005)

“Practical and useful for understanding omniscient POVs issues.”

“To check the grade level of every word.”

“What does your character want? I struggled with this question, feeling that often characters themselves don’t know what they want. Butler’s chapter on longing answers this question by showing writers that characters can be motivated by ambiguous feelings or hungers they are only now discovering.”

Made to Stick: Why Some Ideas Survive and Others Die, by Chip Heath and Dan Heath (Random House, 2007)

“Mark Twain said, ‘A lie can get halfway around the world before the truth can even get its boots on.’ This book explores creating concepts, ideas, and fiction that ‘sticks’ in a way that readers and the public will remember them forever.”

Old Friend from Far Away: The Practice of Writing Memoir, by Natalie Goldberg (Free Press, 2009)

“This book is geared toward writing memoir, but I found it extremely helpful for tapping into emotional and attentive states of thought . . . [It] contains a series of associative writing prompts that are particularly useful for capturing emotions and tactile detail.”

“Written for children, but is a must for anyone wanting to write poetry for young people. She covers sound, rhyme, rhythm, poetic techniques, and poetic forms clearly and simply.”

“A thesaurus/reverse dictionary/almanac with genius categories. Writing a scene in a restaurant? Turn to eating verbs (savoir, gorge, nosh . . . ), and a few pages on you’ll see cutting techniques, and pretty soon you’re deciding if assault with a trivet, trussing needle, or Spork best suits your story. This is my new favorite because you don’t have to know what you’re looking for to find it.”

Real Revision, by Kate Messner (Stenhouse Publishers, 2011)

Revision strategies from Kate and forty other children’s authors, with exercises and sections on character development, pacing, returning to research, word choice, and cutting.

S Is for Story: A Writer’s Alphabet, by Esther Hershenhorn (Sleeping Bear Press, 2009)

An abecedarian (ABC) book on how to create good stories. Written for kids, but with lots of inspiration, advice, and tools for adult writers as well.

Save the Cat: The Last Book on Screenwriting You’ll Ever Need and Save the Cat Strikes Back: More Trouble for Screenwriters to Get Into . . . and Out Of, by Blake Snyder (Michael Wiese Productions, 2005, and Save the Cat! Press, 2009)

“These are actually books about screenwriting . . . but the same things that play into a great film are also essential in great novels. Lots of practical, try-it-right-now activities for plotting, conflict, and pacing.”

Second Sight: An Editor’s Talks on Writing, Revising & Publishing Books for Children and Young Adults, by Cheryl B. Klein (Asterisk Books, 2011)

Self-professed “narrative nerd,” continuity editor on the last two Harry Potter books, and executive editor at Arthur A. Levine Books (Scholastic), Cheryl Klein compiles her conference talks and blog posts. This Kickstarter-funded and self-published book culminates in essays on point, character, plot, voice and “25 Revision Techniques.”

The Spying Heart: More Thoughts on Reading and Writing Books for Children, by Katherine Paterson (Puffin, 1990)

“Whenever I need to be reminded of the true, deep, and real reasons I write for children, I pull out this book and open it to any page.”

Steering the Craft: Exercises and Discussions on Story Writing for the Lone Navigator or the Mutinous Crew, by Ursula K. Le Guin (The Eighth Mountain Press, 1998)

“Great chapter with examples for each POV based on the same scene/characters but from different POVs.”

A guide to dealing with what writers struggle with: voice, beginnings and endings, rejection, the technical aspects of writing, and coming up with an idea. As Jane explains, “Save the blood and pain for real life, where tourniquets and ibuprofen can have some chance of helping. Do not be afraid to grab hold of the experience with both hands and take joy.”

The Teachers & Writers Handbook of Poetic Forms, edited by Ron Padgett (Teachers and Writers Collaborative, 2000)

 Defines and gives examples of poetic terms and forms.

What’s Your Story? A Young Person’s Guide to Writing Fiction, by Marian Dane Bauer (Sandpiper, 1992)

“Newbery Medalist Bauer wrote this book for middle-schoolers . . . Fiction writers see instantly: who our character is, what he wants/needs, and why must drive our stories.”

 Tools to hone your editing skills and deepen your understanding of how to revise your own work as well as someone else’s. With worksheets, sample critiques, and examples.

Writing Changes Everything: The 627 Best Things Anyone Ever Said About Writing, edited by Deborah Brodie (St. Martin’s Press, 1997)

“Whenever you’re in a funk about your work, this book, full of wonderful quotes about writing and the creative life, will surely have something that will lift your spirits and help you through difficult times.”

Writing It Right! How Successful Children’s Authors Revise and Sell Their Stories, by Sandy Asher (Writer’s Institute Publications, 2009)

Behind-the-scenes look at how twenty accomplished children’s authors tackled actual revisions on their own stories. Includes the nine essential questions that editors use to evaluate manuscripts every day.

The Writing Life, by Ellen Gilchrist (University Press of Mississippi, 2005)

The National Book Award Winner’s essays on writing, teaching, and other writers who inspired her (from Shakespeare to Eudora Welty). “Her wit, intelligence, and candor are wildly inspiring.”

Details the elements that all breakout novels share—regardless of genre—and shows writing techniques to make your own books stand out. Covering time and place, subplots, characters, themes, narrative tension, and developing an inspiring premise. (The workbook is loaded with great exercises.)

Writing Children’s Books for Dummies (2nd Ed.) (2013, Wiley) by Lisa Rojany Buccieri and Peter Economy.

A primer for children’s book writers on how to write a children’s book from choosing the format and age range, to creating concepts and character bibles, outlining and illustrating, the writing process itself, contracts and self-publishing. A classroom in a book.

Writing the Natural Way, by Gabriele Rico (Tarcher, 2000)

“Explores left-right brain science, and then gives step-by-step directions and illustrations on its application for students, authors, and anyone else who writes. I use her techniques daily because they work like butterfly nets to catch fleeting thoughts.”

The Nuts and Bolts Guide to Writing Picture Books, by Linda Ashman (Linda Ashman, 2013)

“A practical, “nuts and bolts” handbook for new writers based on everything I’ve learned over the years.”

“Clearly written, well-organized, and loaded with practical information, the guide would make an excellent textbook for creative writing classes and for the do-it-yourselfer.”

More Recommended Books on Illustrating

“Pure genius. Nancy shares rich insights into the creative process. Both copies of her books are held together by a thread because I’ve read them countless times. They sit on my nightstand where I can refer to them whenever I need inspiration.”

Artist to Artist (Philomel Books, 2007)

Caldecott & Co.: Notes on Books & Pictures, by Maurice Sendak (Farrar, Straus and Giroux, 1988)

The legendary illustrator’s essays and musings on writing and illustrating for children, exploring both his critiques of other illustrators’ work and an autobiographical section on his own contributions to the art of the children’s book.

“It is handy to keep this profound little picture book around for the days when you feel like things aren’t going well and you need to bolster your confidence.”

“Insightful look into the lives and work of eighty-plus acclaimed children’s book illustrators. I love reading about other illustrators, how they solve visual problems, and what sparks them.”
“An historic overview of picture books through the ages.”

Based on Will’s course at New York’s School of Visual Arts, this book reveals the basic building blocks and principles of comics, including imagery, the frame, and the application of time, space, and visual forms.

Drawing Words and Writing Pictures: Making Comics: Manga, Graphic Novels, and Beyond: A Definitive Course from Concept to Comic in 15 Lessons, by Jessica Abel and Matt Madden (First Second, 2008)
A course on comic creation centered on storytelling, with chapters on lettering, story structure, and panel layout, culminating in making a finished comic.

Using lessons learned from working in the comic and movie industries, Mateu-Mestre shares his step-by-step system for how to make the audience feel the story while they are reading the story.

How to Make Webcomics, by Scott Kurtz, Kris Straub, Dave Kellet, and Brad Guigar (Image Comics, 2008)
Advice on how to create compelling characters, develop a solid comic strip, build a website, forge a community, and start earning money from your webcomic . . . without having to sell your soul.

How to Write and Illustrate Children’s Books and Get Them Published, edited by Treld Pelkey and Felicity Trotman (Writer’s Digest Books, 2000)
“Lots of great general information about the industry and about submitting work to publishers.”

From media and materials to composition and typography, this book “covers a lot of territory” and includes artwork examples.

Interaction of Color, by Josef Albers (Yale University Press, 1963)
Color studies demonstrating the principles of color relativity, intensity, and temperature, vibrating and vanishing boundaries, and the illusions of transparency and reversed grounds.

The Original Art Catalog (The Society of Illustrators, annual)
The exhibition catalog of the annual show of the best children’s book illustration at the Society of Illustrators. “The best way to see what books, art styles, subjects, and mediums are currently being published. Also, it credits the artist, publisher, art director, editor, and author of each book—a great research tool!”

Pat’s conversations with more than forty luminaries of children’s book illustration, with “childhood photos and drawings, pictures of their studios, and sample illustrations from published books. At the back of the book, each artist shares their secret techniques.”

Understanding Comics, by Scott McCloud (William Morrow Paperbacks, 1994)
Looks at the history, meaning, and art of comics and cartooning.

“It’s as important for an illustrator to understand the writing process for a picture book as it is for a writer to understand the value and dynamics of picture in a picture book. This is an excellent resource. Ann walks you through the picture book process with experience, perception, and practical advice.”

Recommended Biographies
A number of our experts spoke about biographies of other children’s book authors and illustrators as sources of inspiration. Here are the ones they mentioned:

Beatrix Potter’s Art, by Anne Stevenson Hobbs (Frederick Warne, 1989)
Margaret Wise Brown: Awakened by the Moon, by Leonard S. Marcus (Harper Paperbacks, 1999)

Tomie dePaola: His Art & His Stories, by Barbara Elleman (Putnam, 1999)

If you have a favorite book on the craft of writing and/or illustrating for children and teens that isn’t mentioned, please let me know at iamleewind@gmail.com. Include why it’s your favorite, and I’ll post them on SCBWI: The Blog (scbwi.blogspot.com). Thanks!

1,000+ WAYS TO PROMOTE YOURSELF AND YOUR CHILDREN'S BOOKS
Is it just me, or have you noticed that there are at least a dozen new ideas coming at you each day? New apps for iPhone and for Twitter, new groups on Facebook, new blogs to follow, and always new technologies to try. Hard to choose what to look at, impossible to get a handle on all the options, and frustrating to know that somewhere in all those outlets are things that may really be beneficial, if only you had the time to uncover them and still do your day job.

What to do? Well, as Douglas Adams advised in The Hitchhiker’s Guide to the Galaxy, don’t panic. Stay grounded and be strategic. What works for a colleague who tells you he knows the latest and greatest about how to use Twitter, Facebook, YouTube, and Flickr might not work for you—there’s more available than anyone can try, or anyone can know.

The real question is, what is out there, and how does that relate to what you’re trying to accomplish? Even that’s not easily answered, because the information is evolving daily. But if you recognize that, you’ll be more prepared to experiment and move forward.

There are lots of ways to go about it, but one is to let someone else do the research for you. And voilà! Below are a variety of sites to help you with what you need. For example, a recent article showcased “100 Inspiring Ways to Use Social Media in the Classroom.” On that list are writing projects using the short Twitter format and research ideas that could be used by authors with student groups. Other items are not as much of a fit, but you can quickly peruse the list to figure out which can be of interest and then adapt them. Another thing to consider is which mechanisms have been proven to offer the best results. Look for that in “100 Ways to Measure Social Media.” There are similar lists for using Twitter and Flickr, doing website marketing, and for audience building. On other sites you can get good advice for organizing and conducting your work, and you can explore ways to market your career—here related to sports, but you’ll find a good amount that apply to our work as well.

Of course, the main objective is to market children’s books, so inspired by these, I’ve provided a new list of “100 Ways to Promote Your Children’s Books.” But be sure to take note of the last few items there, which are to recognize that this will take perseverance, time, and patience—and know, too, that we can’t expect to do it all.

An author was once overhead saying, “Usually, a new book comes out like cat paws: very soft, barely heard; and then it goes away.”

Regardless of how well a book is written, critical praise doesn’t always translate into sales, and often even well-reviewed books disappear, out-of-print within a couple of years. No matter how much publicity and support your publisher offers, you are the best advocate for your book, and there are actions you can take to prolong its life in print.

Perhaps you’re about to publish a first book and have no idea what to expect. Maybe you’re a seasoned pro looking for new ideas on promoting your books. Here are 25 surefire ways to keep your book selling.

1. Begin laying the groundwork for your book promotion six months before your book is published. Write a press release and e-mail it to newspapers and TV stations closer to the publication date along with a review or two if you have them. Bookpromotion101 (www.bookpromotion101.com) is a good workshop, as is Author Buzz (www.authorbuzz.com), run by MJ Rose.

2. Hire a publicist. If you can’t do that: barter. Find a friend or a student and you offer to edit their stories and novels for free (forever) in exchange for helping you do publicity. This may sound extreme, but book publicity can be grueling work and it helps so much to have a friend with a sense of humor who “gets it.”

3. Check out websites like Winding Oak at www.windingoak.com and the Children’s Literature Network. They are incredibly knowledgeable at helping authors set up events, creating fliers, and doing regular website updates. They charge, of course, but they do a great job. Little Willow is also great for website design.

4. Make postcards and/or bookmarks. Start with a printing of 5,000 copies. You can leave stacks in bookstores, restaurants and libraries. Hand them out on school visits.

5. Set up a website where kids can write to you and learn more about the world of the book and what you do as an author. Peruse other author sites to give you ideas.

6. Update your website regularly. Offer creative writing ideas, story prompts, etc.

7. Send out e-mail blasts as often as you feel comfortable, but don’t overdo it; three or four times a year is a good rule of thumb, and only if there are real updates. Be wary of e-mailing in bulk too often.

8. Join a YA and middle-grade fiction writers or picture book listserv. The Child_Lit Serve out of Rutgers is another great listserv of authors, professors, librarians. Richie Parrington has started an excellent listserv for middle school books for librarians, teachers, and authors. Also, Cynthia Leitich Smith (www.cynthialeitichsmith.com), and Alice Pope (www.cwim.blogspot.com) both maintain excellent blogs about the world of children’s literature. There are many great children’s and YA book blogs. Clicking on one will lead you to many more. Children’s and young adult book bloggers are the ones who keep your books alive. Thank them. Send them your books to review, but only devote a little time each day to these blogs; you want to be protective of your writing time.

9. Create your own book tour! Stay with friends and family. Rent the cheapest rental car and purchase airline tickets through inexpensive online travel sites. Visit bookstores before your book comes out—six months is a good rule of thumb. Set up e-mail correspondence with the store manager, or the person in charge of scheduling their author visits or promotions. Over the next few months, set up dates for the book signings/writing workshops. If you just have a handful of galleys, make photocopies and get them out to select book reviewers. This especially works well for regional newspapers. The bigger markets are so glutted, but the smaller papers do a great job of author profiles and reviews if you let them know in time.

10. E-mail bookstores with your information (book, website, jacket quotes) and follow up those e-mails with store-visits or phone calls. Explain how you are able to offer writing workshops for kids instead of traditional readings. Hint: Be upbeat and professional even when clerks can and will be indifferent. You will find the ones who get you, and as for the ones who don’t, move on with grace. Try to focus on the independent bookstores because they are the ones who will hand-sell your book.

11. Set up writing workshops for kids in schools, libraries, and bookstores. Lead a guaranteed audience of kids in writing their own stories and poems. Make sure art supplies are on hand so the kids can illustrate their creations, and offer to publish any stories that they e-mail you in a special section of your blog or website. The fee for attendance? Have the bookstore require the purchase of one of your books to participate in the writing workshop. Talk to the parents and teachers who attend. Networking can lead to “artist-in-residencies” at schools and more school visits.

Keep writing workshops high-energy: MORE participation. Get kids excited through sincere praise, and encouragement, then up on their feet to read their poems or stories. With older kids and teen groups, smaller circles work best. Get them writing about favorite secret places or magic powers or fishing—whatever relates to them. Bring in the five senses. Tell them funny stories about your childhood: the bus bully in fourth grade, the nun in sixth grade, your father’s driving. Kids will identify with stories about how you survived childhood and be encouraged to write their own stories.

For the writing workshops with young readers, bring in a suitcase of props that inspired your book. In other words, what do your characters love and collect? I bring in special agate stones, peacock feather, books, pictures, music, old cow bones, paintings, drawings, journals in my characters’ voices, fairy books, and The Synonym Finder. The kids can see how messy writing is before a book is a book. They will love to explore the table of props and it will inspire the shyer kids to ask questions... Oftentimes, librarians or teachers will contact local media to cover your school visit and announce your next signing or even do a story.

Tell the kids they are also “storycatchers”! Tell them to interview their parents and grandparents; encourage them to be “storycatchers” in their family. In one of my workshops a boy said, “I am not a writer.”

“What do you like to do?” I replied.

He said, “Fish.”

“Well, write about fishing,” I told him. “Tell me about night crawlers. How much does a can of night crawlers cost?”

“About a $1.25 a can,” he said. “I can write about fishing?”

I said, “You may write about anything you want!” He wound up writing a great story about how he loves to brag when he catches a big bass.

12. Consider having a reading/book signing at a place other than a bookstore. Go to the pancake house, a bar, a tea house or some other nontraditional place. A friend’s backyard or your own if you like. An independent bookseller will love to sell books, and you’ll be able to woo more friends into coming and bringing their friends. If you have kids, your kids can run around and celebrate too. Hire a musician; a left-handed banjo player was a hit at my most recent reading.

13. Do as many free writing workshops as you feel you can at first. Do them for foster kids, kids in juvenile hall—kids who don’t have a chance to meet with writers. Publish their stories on your blog if they want you to do so.

14. 826 Valencia, a San Francisco–based organization, is a great place to do free writing workshops for kids, and they will announce your visit on their website which reaches people across the country. They are opening more places in more cities. Check out their site: www.826valencia.org.

15. Pitch workshops or classes to MediaBistro, UCLA online or at a university near you. It’s free advertising for you and your book and your class. You also get to meet wonderful students in your workshop.

16. Set up a six- or ten-week writing workshop at a local bookstore for teens or adults wanting to write children’s stories. You will be able to charge, of course, and the bookstore will advertise the class and your book on its website and in its newsletter.

17. Go support other authors. Show up at their signings and readings and buy their books. Host them in interviews on your website or blog, or simply mention their books in a short review. We’re all in this together, and the more we can reach out and support each other, the more we’ll get back.

18. Send your press release to your old grade school, high school, or college. Offer to meet with students from your alma mater to talk to them about writing.

19. Write an essay for your alumni magazine about writing for kids, or about how you became a writer. You’ll get readers; universities like to hear about their graduates and their adventures. If a rural library asks you to donate books, say yes. Say yes as much as you can. Just do it. If you can’t do it all the time, that’s okay, but say yes whenever possible.

20. Write an essay/op. ed. piece for a newspaper with a large readership. This will get your name out to more readers.

21. Record your book at your local Braille Institute and offer to do a workshop at its summer reading program. You’ll meet amazing kids who are budding storytellers.

22. Go to ALA, Book Expo, SCBWI events or book festivals on your own dime at least once if you have a book coming out that season. Ask your publisher to “badge” you in to ALA and Book Expo if they cannot offer you a signing during the conventions. Go meet people. It’s worth it. You will make connections you cannot make e-mailing from home. Tight budget? Stay with friends and family to save money, or contact the SCBWI regional advisor in your area to see if a nearby member might have a guest room available.

23. Find a local chapter of the SCBWI and offer to do a workshop on setting, plot, voice.

24. Write thank-you notes to everyone: librarians, teachers, booksellers. Be appreciative. Don’t whine. Say “thank you.”

25. Get a GPS navigation device. It really helps out there on the road.

Remember, the more you give of yourself as an author, the more you will connect with your readers at every level. But also give yourself a break and time to be alone to write and just be, so you can gather the stamina needed to get out there again.
The publishing process, from manuscript to publication to out-of-print, is long and can be intimidating. Many things will happen to your book over which you have no or only limited control. But as an author, you do have some rights and responsibilities. They fall into two categories: those spelled out in the publisher’s contract, and those to your books, to give them the longest life possible. What follows is a list of decisions to be made and steps to be taken by the author throughout the publishing process to help your book stay alive. If you have an agent, he/she will help with this process, and actually handle some of these items themselves, but the ultimate responsibility is yours.

You have a right to be concerned about what happens to it. Never be shy about looking after its interests when the end result will be higher sales, which will please the publisher; more readers reached, which will please you; and the satisfaction of knowing you didn’t let it die an untimely death.

PRE-ACCEPTANCE

» Should you go for hardcover or paperback? The kind of book you want to write may determine that. But if your writing could work in either market, keep the differences in mind. The hardcover market is more prestigious, but difficult to break into. Most hardcover books will be reviewed in all or almost all of the major review publications. They will sell in modest numbers but may stay in print longer than paperbacks do. Paperback publishers often want writers for existing or proposed series, so your artistic freedom may be limited. Paperback originals do have their own review sources, but their sales are strongly affected by the publisher’s promotional efforts and early reactions in the marketplace. Paperback series, in particular, can be lucrative, but do not stay in print long.

» Timing: Plan to follow your first published book with a second and a third at regular intervals. At least one a year is a good schedule, if you can achieve it. Be sure to leave time for writing. You want to build an audience for your books who will be waiting impatiently for your next one. (Think of Dick Francis and Sue Grafton. Think of Patricia Polacco and Eve Bunting!) Don’t let two or three years go by between books. You will be quickly forgotten. Your readers will also grow up and move on to other authors.

» How many publishers should you publish with? If you are committed to writing in one genre, such as picture books for pre-schoolers, and you are reasonably happy with your publisher and editor, you will want to stay with them. Your editor will help you develop your writing and career, and your publisher may support your growing backlist as well as your new titles. If you are writing in a variety of genres, you will want to try to find two or more publishing houses. Do not overdo this. Flitting lightly from genre to genre and publisher to publisher will not win you or your books the friends and advocates you need in the publishing world. (See “Your editor leaves . . .” below.) In the early stages of your career, establish yourself in the genre you do best. At some point you may want to branch out or move on, and by then you will have a professional track record.

» Contract negotiations: During contract negotiations, maintain a cordial and professional tone at all times. Especially early in your career, you may not be able to get many changes made, and being overly demanding may damage your relationship with your editor. According to Brad Bunnin, coauthor of The Writer’s Legal Companion, you need to understand four crucial points about negotiations. The first point is that they are negotiations. Some things are not negotiable, but you will be surprised at how many things can be changed. Know what you want—what is really important to you—and it’s more likely that you will get it. Don’t ask for things that are not important. The second is don’t agree to anything, including the advance, over the phone. When the publisher calls to offer you a contract, ask to see the offer in writing first so you can think it over. Contracts are complicated legal documents. You need time to understand what it is you are signing. The third point—don’t sign it until you understand everything in it. This is not as impossible as it sounds. The SCBWI publishes, and regularly updates, the “SCBWI Sample Children’s Book Contract” for members to use (page 265). If you are still in the dark after taking a tour through your own contract with it as a guide, ask your editor for clarification. As a last resort, consider paying a publishing lawyer to explain what the contract says and even to do your negotiating for you. The fourth point incorporates all the others—if any point is important to you, get it written into the contract. Anything agreed to over the phone is not legally binding.

POST-ACCEPTANCE/PRE-PUBLICATION
As with contract negotiations, a polite and professional approach will work best as you interact with your editor and other publishing staff during the pre-publication period.

» The copyedited manuscript and advance reader copies: Hardcover publishers usually send the copyedited manuscript and then the advance reader copies (ARCs) to authors as a matter of routine. Be sure to ask early on in the process about what you’ll be receiving, and make your expectations clear. Even publishers that do not routinely send ARCs to authors may be willing to do so if you promise and provide a quick review. Don’t forget to check everything, including the copyright information, for accuracy.

» Checking illustrations for accuracy: If you have written a book in which the text is scrupulously researched and accurate to the last detail, you want the illustrations to be equally accurate. Negotiate the right to see them and request changes. Put this right in the contract, if you can: ask for “consultation, not approval” on the illustrations. Generally, this is important only in nonfiction.

» Cover copy: Copy on the jacket of your book is intended to help sell it, but still should be accurate. Ask to see and edit (if necessary) the front flap and back cover copy. Otherwise you may find the copy giving readers a first impression you don’t want them to have, or information about you that is incorrect. Avoid asking for changes for stylistic reasons, however.

» Inclusion in the publisher’s catalog: Find out which catalog your book will be listed in and when the catalog will be mailed so you can maximize the effect of your visits to local bookstores and libraries. If the ordering information (or the book) is not available to them the day you visit, by the time it does come they may have forgotten you and your book.

» Books in Print (BIP) and online bookstores: It’s the publisher’s job to see that your book is listed in BIP and at online bookstores. Most take care of this as a matter of routine. Find out which edition your book will be listed in—children’s, the general edition, or paperbacks. The more places it is listed, the better. Given a choice of only one, it’s preferable to have your books listed in the general edition rather than the children’s because many booksellers and smaller libraries take only the general edition. When BIP comes out, check that your book is listed and immediately tell your publisher if not, so that it can be included in the next edition. Your book should also appear, with a jacket image, at Amazon and other online bookstores a month or more before its publication date. If it does not, or if any information about it is incorrect, tell your publisher; do not ask the bookstore to make the corrections yourself.

MARKETING
When working with a publisher’s marketing staff, keep in mind that they most likely are very busy and responsible for dozens of titles in addition to yours. They will appreciate help, but not constant monitoring. Try to cultivate one person as your contact.

» Marketing your book: Hardcover publishers rely on reviews to do their selling. Your publisher will put your title in the catalog, tell the sales reps about it, and generally include it in a list in ad in professional journals. The rest is up to you, and there is a lot you can do. Look in your local library for books such as Susan Raab’s An Author’s Guide to Children’s Book Promotion and John Kremer’s 1001 Ways to Market Your Book, for ideas on how to promote your book through schools, libraries, bookstores, websites, special interest groups, geographic areas, telephone conferencing, etc. Do your homework, and then do the footwork. It makes a difference.

» Reaching reviewers: Publishers generally can be relied upon to send out review copies to important review sources such as School Library Journal, Booklist, and Publishers Weekly. Nothing you can do will guarantee your book will be reviewed positively or be reviewed at all. You can and should check that copies are sent to these reviewers, and you should suggest other review sources you know of, in your author’s questionnaire if you are sent one. At the very least, find out who writes reviews in your area and make sure your book is sent to them. A note saying that you are a local author may help get it some attention, and if there is something unique, timely, or fascinating about it, say so in a single sentence. Resist the urge to persuade them to read your wonderful book by giving a detailed plot summary or listing the advance readers who loved it. If you have friends in high places or if your book appeals to a special segment of the reading public with its own publications, make a list of these people and publications and send it to your publisher. If you have the time and personal contacts for your own campaign, you can also ask to have review copies sent to you, although not all publishers will do this, and you will need to coordinate with the marketing department to avoid duplication of effort.

» Eligibility for awards: Check lists of competitions and awards such as those published by the Children’s Book Council and by Gale Research. These are available at your public library or online. Be sure your publisher knows which ones your book may be eligible to enter and sends the correct number of copies to the right address. Publishers do send out books for award consideration, but may not have thought of your book for a particular award.

YOUR BOOK’S LIFE AFTER PUBLICATION

» Is your book available? You can keep track of the current availability of your book by periodically asking your local independent bookseller to check the wholesalers’ lists. If your book isn’t on any of them, or is listed as OS or OSI, call your publisher’s ordering department at once, or check its status with your editor. “OS” usually means “out of stock temporarily.” The publisher should be able to give you a reprint date. The “I” in OSI means “indefinitely.” It has sold out the current printing and there may or may not be plans to reprint. If you can do anything at this point to stimulate demand and orders for your book—DON’T! Orders coming in will, occasionally, tip the balance in favor of reprinting.

» Paperback rights: Most publishers keep paperback rights in-house
nowadays, but you or your agent need to keep tabs if rights are sold to another publisher. Ask for a copy of the contract or a clear summary of the terms. Once the paperback royalties have exceeded the advance, they will be paid to your hardback publisher, who puts half of them in your account. There they stay until your publisher’s royalty payment date, which can be six months later. There is nothing you can do about this. What you can do, however, is stipulate that copies of the paperback publisher’s statement be sent to you (or your agent) as well as to the hardback publisher. Make sure that once the paperback advance has earned out, royalty payments are in fact being made to the hardback publisher and that you are getting your share. If payments are not being made, call your publisher or agent. Keep track of what happens after paperback rights are sold. In the unlikely event that the hardback publisher sells reprint rights to a paperback publisher who doesn’t exercise the option, you’ll know, and can call your publisher. You keep the advance on royalties, and your publisher can now resell reprint rights to another paperback publisher.

» Your editor leaves or is laid off: When the editor who has been working closely with you on your book (thereby making it his/her book in the eyes of the publisher) abruptly departs, your book may become an orphan. Unless it’s an award-winner, no one at the original publisher will feel as strongly as your editor did about its survival and success. You have two options here. You can stay with that publisher, sending them your next manuscript and acquiring a new editor, who will then take on responsibility for all of your books, or you can stay with your editor, sending your next manuscripts to his/her new publishing house. (This is only an option if your editor will still be publishing the kind of books you are writing, which is not always the case.) If you do follow your editor, accept that the book you both left behind may be short-lived unless you want to write a sequel.

» Your book goes out-of-print: Increasingly, many books are put out-of-print within a year or two of publication. Do not take it personally. When your publisher notifies you that your book is going out-of-print, it is most likely too late for you to be able to do anything to stop this from happening. It may be out-of-print already, since OP decisions are not made by the editor, who may only be told after the fact. Don’t fight, but do look to the future. If you are offered copies of your book at a steep discount, buy as many as you can afford and can store. You will be able to sell them at school visits and through your website, and to give them away as samples or prizes. Find out about getting the digital file or film. Be sure to get a “reversion of rights” letter from the publisher. Though it’s difficult to resell publication rights to an OP book, it’s not impossible. Keeping it in print yourself as an ebook or print-on-demand title (or both) is more likely, and authors do follow this strategy, promoting these resuscitated books along with their in-print titles. But don’t put time into supporting a book this way instead of into writing the next one. Books die, for many reasons. When one does, the best remedy is to write the next.

PRINCIPLES FOR USING SOCIAL MEDIA EFFECTIVELY

by Alice Pope

To tweet or not to tweet; that is the question. Or to Facebook. Or to blog. Or to Pinterest. Or whatever’s next. By now everyone’s aware of social media, and it’s becoming more and more a staple for promotion of authors and illustrators. Even renowned, award-winning author Richard Peck—who a few years ago, with a great deal of conviction, declared to a packed ballroom at an SCBWI Summer Conference that “friend is not a verb”—now tweets (@RichardPeckAuth). He joins the ranks of Judy Blume (@judyblume), Bruce Coville (@brucecoville), Laurie Halse Anderson (@halseanderson), Libba Bray (@libbabray), and other children’s publishing luminaries. That speaks volumes about the importance of not just an online presence, but a social online presence, for authors and illustrators. And this applies to both the published and the aspiring.

Contrary to popular belief, social media isn’t just about learning what everyone had for lunch. It’s also not about hard selling. Your friends and followers won’t be around for long if you do nothing but ask them for things (“read my blog post,” “attend my event,” “buy my book”). As a writer or illustrator, the purpose of social media is to create a network, make connections, and share things of value with like-minded fans and followers. If you haven’t yet joined the conversation, or if you’re currently engaged in social media, here are some things to keep in mind so you can use Facebook and Twitter to your best advantage.

Invest Time
When it comes to social media, if you’re not willing to invest time to participate in them, they will not be much of a help to you. Social networking is about building relationships. Relationships that start online may often be solidified offline, just as relationships that start offline can blossom via social media. Think about a friend you met at a conference who you now interact with regularly on Facebook, or that writing group you found online who you now meet with in person.

And just like with any other relationship, there’s a trust-building process, and you have to be committed for the long term. Creating a network is a slow build; it happens over time. It takes patience and perseverance. Note also that you’re not going to see results overnight, whether that’s gaining thousands of followers or seeing an increase in book sales. Using social media as an author or illustrator is all about building long-term awareness, developing an audience, and general networking. You’re building a network that will ultimately help you market your books (which, really, you can’t do on your own these days). And in that capacity, social media should be part of your overall plan as you create your identity and build yourself as a brand.

Reach Out and Participate
When you engage in social media, it’s all about expanding your group of friends, not just talking to the same ones. Don’t be cliquish, but instead judiciously broaden your base, increase your circle, and be open to new friendships and contacts. You never know when a small moment of reaching out via social media (retweeting someone or sharing their book trailer on Facebook) could turn into something positive for your career down the line. If you’ve cultivated a network of fans, friends, and followers before you have a book to promote, that can only have a positive impact when you do have work available. Users of social media notice when they’re noticed, and if you’re helping them expand their reach, they will likely respond in kind when the opportunity presents itself.

Social media like Facebook and Twitter are just that: social.
Social networking is about talking, but it’s also about listening. You can’t engage with people if you don’t know what they’re interested in. Respond to Tweets. Comment on Facebook updates and blog posts your friends link to. Engage in discussions. Show people you’re listening and you’re interested in them. And remember that when it comes to social media, you can’t control other people and how they respond to your efforts. You can’t make people buy your book or read your blog. You can only control your level of participation and how active you are. The rest is out of your hands.

Just try to be consistent with your posting and participation. Popping in once a week isn’t going to help you much in terms of gaining a following. Try your best to be both visible and consistent.

Be Yourself, but Be Professional

It’s okay—ideal, even—to show your personality and be yourself online. Readers and potential readers want to know you, not a persona you try to project (unless you’re, say, Stephen Colbert). Don’t be a jerk. Don’t complain. Don’t be a salesman. Be an authentic you. Focus on being genuine, sincere, and meaningful. And keep in mind that social media is informal, so it’s okay to relax and be yourself. But always remember that the Internet is public, and things you say can come back to haunt you, so always use your best judgment. If you’re at all hesitant about posting something, you probably shouldn’t. And it’s not necessarily about how skilled you are at writing an update or a Tweet. It’s more about your passion for the things you’re talking about. Passion is compelling—get that across.

Presenting a professional self is about your words, but it’s also about your appearance. Your photos should be professional, but that doesn’t mean stuffy and no fun. If you have a great headshot, use it. A photo of you tipsy in your Halloween costume is a no; a shot of you in your themed outfit at the SCBWI Summer Conference pool party is a yes. Showcase your work (a shelf of your books, your latest book jacket) or something related to your work (an illustration from your portfolio) in your Facebook cover photo and Twitter background. It’s also great to carry the design theme of your website/blog through to social media so users easily recognize you as they move between platforms.

Learn and Share; Don’t Sell

Facebook and Twitter are rich sources of information and make it easy to keep up with industry news and headlines. Writers, illustrators, editors, and agents offer tips and advice, link to helpful blog posts, articles, and news bits, answer questions, share knowledge and insights, and engage in discussions. This is all part of the community-building that happens on online social networks. There’s a generosity present among like-minded users of social media.

Retweet and share the links and posts of others. If you read something that’s valuable to you, it will likely be valuable to your friends and followers. They will be grateful, and those whom you retweeted or reposted will remember and likely return the favor. Supporting the community will result in the community supporting you—social networking is reciprocal. By participating in the discussion and being generous yourself (sharing links, recommending blog posts, retweeting), you may gain the attention of gatekeepers (book review bloggers, publishing professionals) who can ultimately help you grow your network and readership in the long run.

It’s great to promote what you’re doing via social media (your latest blog post, your upcoming bookstore appearance, a conference in which you’re participating), but spend the majority of your time supporting, encouraging, promoting, or sharing, and thus participating in and building community. Focus on socializing, not selling. Social media sites are communities.

Posting Dos and Don’ts

When it comes to seeing your posts and your Tweets, the majority of your friends and followers will find them via their newsfeeds rather than by visiting your pages. Avoid updating too often on Facebook, as that can annoy friends/followers/subscribers. If you like to update frequently, Twitter is a better platform. Six posts a day on Facebook is too many. Six posts a day on Twitter is just fine (and some users post even more than that daily).

As far as what to say, straightforward “what I’m doing” posts are fine so long as they will be interesting to, and likely elicit responses from, some of your friends. And, honestly, it is okay to talk about what you’re having for lunch—people love and respond to food, and these kinds of posts help your network get to know you. Just don’t do it all the time, and don’t make it boring. “Munching on leftover turducken on grilled sourdough as I catch up on publishing industry blogs” is kind of interesting and reveals a little about you. “Time for my oatmeal” is as dull as... oatmeal.

Photos, videos, and links stand out in a Facebook feed, so it’s a good idea to get visual now and again. Comment on what you find interesting/funny/outrageous/important about what you’re posting. This allows friends to learn about you, and they may relate to what you’re posting and start/participate in a discussion about it via comments. All your photos, videos, and links need not be publishing/book-related. While these types of posts are certainly useful and of interest to your network, it’s good to offer a balance of industry and personal, thus being both useful to your network and allowing them to get to know you.

Social media is a great way to remind people you have a blog or a website as long as that’s not the only thing you post about. The reality is that unless you’re well-known (and even if you’re well-known), with so much online content out there, it’s essential to remind readers to visit your blog, because otherwise they probably won’t make a habit of it. And not only will your Facebook and Twitter friends and followers likely be the majority of your audience, they will also repost/retweet about content that they found valuable and thus spread the word further than you could on your own.

On Facebook, take advantage of features like lists and subscriptions. Lists allow you to provide certain content to certain specific groups of friends. For example, you can invite a list of local friends to a book signing, or post links to publishing news to only a list of writer friends. Using lists helps you focus your efforts and keeps you from offering certain information to those who will not be interested. It also allows you to disseminate personal information to your inner circle rather than to your entire network of personal and professional contacts. The Facebook subscription feature allows people to follow your posts rather than be your friend—that way they get to see what you have to say, but their posts won’t show up on your newsfeed. For authors with personal (rather than fan) pages, lists and subscriptions can be invaluable. (Check Facebook’s help pages or Google for instructions on setting up these features.)

Enjoy
Social networks are places where writers and illustrators can hang out, vent, commiserate, share, and get refreshed. Engaging in social media can be fun. If it feels like a chore, something you dread, then either it’s not right for you or you’re doing it wrong. If it’s not working for you, reassess, consider the above advice, and give it another shot. Social media can certainly play a role in the success of an author or illustrator, and you don’t want to miss out on the opportunity to have it work for you.
While it’s essential to invest time engaging in social media, beware: If you're not careful, it can become a huge time waster—it’s fun and can be a little addictive. Take a self-disciplined approach so social networking doesn’t infringe on your creative time.

Consider giving yourself a time limit—say, thirty minutes in the morning, with a couple of five-minute check-ins during the day (or whatever works for you)—and stick to it.

It’s perfectly acceptable to temporarily disconnect when you find it necessary. Tell your friends and followers you’ll be offline for a week (or a month) so you can concentrate on work. When you come back to check in, you’ll likely have plenty to share.

Don’t follow everyone who follows you, and don’t accept every friend request that comes your way. Weeding through an endlessly noisy Twitter or Facebook newsfeed can be annoying and just plain daunting. With fewer posts to deal with, the time you do devote to keeping up with your network will be more focused and more valuable.

It’s absolutely okay to unfollow or unfriend those from whom you are getting no value (and “value” could be anything from a daily chuckle to links to consistently helpful blog posts). Become a good judge of what’s interesting/relevant/quirky, as opposed to what’s inane/inappropriate/vague/cryptic/TMI. Seek out the former and unfriend the latter.

Beyond Facebook (facebook.com) and Twitter (twitter.com), here are a few other social networks where bookish types congregate:

- Pinterest (pinterest.com): A site allowing users to “pin” images and videos to “boards”. It’s a great way to visually share things, like book covers and trailers, and see what others are looking at in various categories (like “Books Worth Reading.”) It’s easy to accumulate followers by signing in with your Facebook account.

- YouTube (youtube.com): Upload book trailers and other promotional or fun videos that can be embedded in blogs and websites, loaded onto Facebook and Google+, linked to from Twitter, and pinned on Pinterest. Users can create their own YouTube “channels.”

- Google+ (plus.google.com): Just as with Facebook, users can share updates, videos, and photos and easily create “circles,” allowing for focused social networking. Plus, you can upload a video plug-in and create “hangouts,” where you can video chat with, say, a writers group or book club.

- LinkedIn (linkedin.com): A more professional social network, LinkedIn users list job experience and skills and can leave recommendations for others in their network. You’ll find a wealth of publishing types here.

- Tumblr (tumblr.com): This is a blogging platform that allows users to easily upload text, images, quotes, links, chat, music, and video. It’s a great platform for those who wish to integrate media to blogs but don’t have extensive programming knowledge. You can follow other users to see their posts.

- Goodreads (goodreads.com): This is a social network all about reading. Users share their reviews of books with friends in their networks. Reviews are searchable by author, title, ISBN, and genre. Goodreads also features an author program to help authors reach their audience.
So you want to start a blog. Or, maybe someone (like an editor or an agent) has told you that you need a blog. Or, you’ve seen other authors and illustrators’ blogs and thought, I can do that.

Well, you can. But the web is crowded and loud, and to break through you need a plan. Here are seven steps to build that plan:

STEP 1: BE AUTHENTIC

You don’t need “a” blog – you need your blog, one that’s unique, content-rich and effective. In a word: Authentic.

“What is your unique voice?”

This is something that editors and agents are talking about all the time. They’re asking authors and illustrators, are you telling your story in a way that only you – and no one else – could?

Imagine you want to do a picture book about The Boy Who Cried Wolf. You’re going to need to figure out what makes your take on the story unique, right? Are you telling it from a different point of view? Is there an unexpected twist? What about your retelling makes it uniquely yours?

Look at John Rocco’s “Wolf! Wolf!” [link here: http://roccoart.com/wolf-wolf/]

It’s a retelling of that Boy Who Cried Wolf fable, but told from the wolf’s point of view, in China, and with a great twist at the end that makes it the version that only John could have written and illustrated.

“Wolf! Wolf!” has its own voice, and that makes it stand out and be successful.

Now you need to ask yourself these questions about your blog:
- What is my blog voice?
- What’s going to make my blog post on something 300, or 3,000, or 30,000 other people are also blogging about stand out? (hint: the only thing you have that no one else has is you!)

- How is my blog uniquely authentic – a genuine expression of me?

Action Plan for Step 1:
- Make a list of the three blog posts you’re most proud of (or the three posts you’d most like to write.)
- What is the common element that makes them stand out? What makes them uniquely you?
- Defining this is the first step to finding your authentic blogging voice!

STEP 2: CLAIM YOUR POWER

Blogging is publishing 2.0

There are no gatekeepers (for good and bad – make sure you proofread before hitting ‘publish!’) and it’s pretty much free. There is some hardware involved, though internet time and computers are available in many libraries.

Blogger, Wordpress, YouTube, Twitter, Facebook*, Squarespace, Tumblr, Pinterest… the list of blogging platforms is constantly changing, and as of this writing a quick search turned up more than 20 available options. There are people out there who will be interested in what you have to say… But what are you going to say?

Blogging is your opportunity to create content, filter content and share content.

Want to write your own poems? Share your illustration process? Conduct an interview? That’s all content you create.

Want to let your blog readers know about your favorite movies that relate to your blog’s theme? Discuss how a book or TV show works or doesn’t work from your perspective? Want to rant about the latest Disney’s kid’s App? That’s all content you filter. (Think of filtering content as a mix of someone else’s content and your contribution to the conversation about that.)

Seen a great clip on YouTube? Or an insightful article more people need to read? Or a fascinating blog post on craft? That’s all content you share.

Create. Filter. Share. Blogging is powerful!

Action Plan For Step 2:

Try to answer these questions:

» What content do you want to create?
» What content do you want to filter?
» What content do you want to share?

*A note on Facebook: technically, things you post on Facebook become Facebook’s. Blogging at your own site (through Blogger or Wordpress or another platform) keeps your material yours, and you’re not giving up right of usage. A lot of people are on Facebook, but I’d recommend against making it your only platform. Better to blog somewhere else and post about it on Facebook. That gets you the traffic from your Facebook friends but you stay in charge of the content you’ve created.

STEP 3: SHOW RESPECT

How personal do you want to go?

Some people post photos of their kids. Others refer to their family members by category, like “Teen” or “Husband.” Make some decisions for yourself.

Remember that you shouldn’t blog anything you wouldn’t want your mother, your kid’s kindergarten teacher, and any possible future employer to see on the front page of the New York Times or the local news!

Respect yourself and others will respect you, too.

How safe a space is your blog?

Do you have a controversial topic? How much dissent do you want at your virtual dinner party? How are you going to control your blog? Will you moderate every comment? Will you allow anonymous comments?

It’s your blog and you are in charge. If a comment offends you, or seems off-topic, go ahead and delete it. Your blog is self-publishing, and you’re the publisher. You decide what gets in and what doesn’t.

Similarly, you must monitor for spam. There’s a lot of it that will be coming your way, and nothing turns off readers quicker than threads full of spammy, inappropriate, unrelated comments. They’re going to think, ‘If the blog owner doesn’t care enough to keep this place nice, why would I come back?’

Action Plan for Step 3:

» Be polite. When commenting anywhere online, don’t blatantly self-promote. Stay on-topic and contribute to their conversation. It’s good Karma, and over time, sharing great comments will have readers wondering ‘Just who is that insightful commenter?’ and they’ll start clicking back to you.

STEP 4: LEAD WITH PASSION

Writers tend to work around similar themes in the content they create. Often this revolves around some personal passion for a cause or value.

You need to figure out, what are your passions? What is your thematic message?

To help you put it into words, see if you can answer this question:

What is the point of you having a blog?

(Note that ‘selling books’ is not a helpful answer. Everyone wants to sell more of their books. Dig deeper.)

Define this passion. Write it down. Say it out loud. Defining your passion will help you stay on theme.

Sticking to your passion will imbue everything you post with the sense that it’s important. It will seem like you care about it, because you do care about it – it’s your passion! And you caring about what you’re posting will have your readers caring, too.

Knowing your passion you’ll be able to create, filter and share content with an eye to how it all fits together synergistically.

Think of your passion as your blogging compass. It will help you get where you want to go.

Action Plan for Step 4:

» Use Google alerts and twitter # searches to find out not just who is talking about you, but who is talking about your subject, your passion. Join in the conversation where it’s already happening, and contribute meaningfully. Over time, you can become a leading voice on your theme.

STEP 5: BE DILIGENT

Short Term/Long Term

Recognize that an audience builds over time. Don’t start a blog without a six-month plan for sustaining your posting. Allow yourself to roll out content over time. Be careful of unrealistic expectations that will deflate you if they’re not met. Focus on short term steps that will get you to long term goals.

Set yourself up for success

A regular blogging schedule (like posting once a week, or once a month) on a regular day is better (for readers, search engines and the longevity of your blog) than seven posts one week and nothing for three months after.

Explore the ‘scheduling’ function on many blog platforms to pre-publish (or publish in advance) your posts. That way you can create posts in a clump, but have them go up on your blog on a regular schedule.

Note: There are no rules with blogging, and it’s all under your control. There are bloggers who don’t blog consistently, but once in a while have a brilliant idea, make it happen and get tons of traffic and attention, and then they focus on other things until their next amazing idea… A great example is how author/illustrator Jim Averbeck decided to create a ‘red carpet’ for the Newbery and Caldecott awards. [link to http://www.kidlitredcarpet.com/ ] Jim got dressed up and shot video of himself interviewing famous authors and illustrators standing on a red bath mat before they went in for the ceremony! He did it for a number of years, and each time it got lots of well-deserved attention.

Consider Solo Blogging Versus Group Blogging

With a solo blog, it’s all yours. Your voice, your passion, your content, your control and your promotional vehicle. What’s also all yours is the responsibility for regularly creating, filtering and sharing content, and you are on your own dealing with comments, changes, archiving, link updating, spam and other ‘blog business.’ You’re also on your own in terms of getting people to come to your blog.

With a group blog, the responsibilities are vastly less, but you don’t get the control or the same promotional/branding value. For a group blog, having a clear theme is critical! Also, consider how many more people will come to a blog when there are multiple people who are passionate about promoting it!

Action Plan For Step 5:

Don’t overwhelm yourself. You don’t have to do it all right now.

» Narrow down your to-do list to the top three things you want to do with your blog.

» Pace yourself. Setting realistic goals – and meeting them – will feel great!

STEP 6: DEFINE YOUR CIRCLES OF INFLUENCE

Most blogs have less than 20 unique visitors a day, because their circle of influence is limited to their friends and family.

What you need to do is find the people and groups out there who share your passions and affiliations. Who else is your audience? Working moms? Queer teens? School counselors? Independent booksellers? Sport camps? Pre-school teachers? Knitters? Girl Scout troop leaders?

Whatever you’re writing about, whoever you are, your values/issues/identities hold opportunity: You care passionately, and you’re not trying to sell them your books. You’re trying to engage them about your passion, which maybe they share…

Note: While the children’s book community is super-supportive, beware of the echo chamber. You want to speak to your fellow writers and illustrators, sure, but you want your books and stories to go beyond that audience as well.

Action Plan for Step 6:

» Take a blank piece of paper, and draw an egg-sized circle in the middle of it. Write the name of your blog there. Around it, in circles that touch the first, add in those additional audiences and groups.

I spent five minutes doing this for my personal blog, I’m Here. I’m Queer. What The Hell Do I Read?

This brainstorming exercise doesn’t have to be neat, it’s just for you.

This helps you see where you can go to connect and hook into your communities. What’s extra-cool is that it’s also the secret to generating content ideas.

For each circle, ask yourself ‘What can I offer this group?’

When the #WeNeedDiverseBooks movement took off (after I’d been blogging at I’m Here. I’m Queer. What the Hell Do I Read? for seven years), I wanted to do something more on my blog to support it but I wasn’t sure what. This exercise helped me discover the connection between “other authors and illustrators who include LGBTQ characters and themes,” “Ally for other diversity in Kid Lit” and the “#WeNeedDiverseBooks” circles. What could I offer other children’s content creators to help get more diverse books out there in the world? That’s how my “Agents Looking For Diversity” series [link to: http://www.leewind.org/search/label/Agents%20Looking%20For%20Diversity ] came about, and one or more of those interviews are consistently in the top ten most popular posts for my blog. I didn’t do them because they’d be popular, I did them because I wanted to contribute. But it’s a nice perk.

STEP 7: BLOG WITH JOY

Lee & Low Books’ Marketing and Publicity Director Hannah Ehrlich said this in her post Marketing 101: The Best Social Media Platforms For Authors [link: http://blog.leeandlow.com/2015/09/03/marketing-101-best-social-media-platforms-for-authors/#more-11304 ] “One of the questions I get most often from authors – both new and experienced – is, “Which social media platforms do I have to be on?” There are a lot of ways to answer this question but I want to start by addressing the question itself, which is often phrased in exactly this way. The answer is: you don’t have to be on any social media platforms you don’t want to be on. …the number one thing you should ask yourself is whether a particular platform will be enjoyable and sustainable to you.”
It's great advice. If you don’t enjoy blogging, you’re not going to be good at it. You won’t bring your passion. And it won’t offer you the results you want.

Think about what makes you laugh. What changes your emotional temperature. What makes you want to share? What have you shared with your friends and colleagues in the last month?

Where do you want to spend your online reading time? What conversations do you want to join?

Not every blog needs to have an audience like “The Huffington Post” to be successful. Success can mean many different things, but ultimately, if you’re not enjoying blogging, you’re not doing it right.

The world doesn’t need another blog post about what you had for lunch, no matter how popular food photos seem to be. (Unless the food is somehow expressive of your passion. Or you’re a celebrity. And even then…)

What would you care to read about on the blog of a stranger? It should be interesting, inspired, intriguing and passionate. It should be written in a way that makes you feel that the author cared, or why should you care? Make people care about what you write.

When you’re doing something you love, it shows. Show your passion, and show your joy.

Action Plan for Step 7:
» Consider that if you’re truly blogging your passion, you won’t have to find your joy. It will have found you.

Work through the above steps and action plans, and you’ll have your roadmap to blogging success. See you online! ☺️

INTERNATIONAL BLOGGERS: WHAT THEY CAN DO FOR YOUR BOOK

by Angela Morrison

It’s late. You’re sitting in bed with your laptop, catching up on e-mail. A blogger from Brazil requests an ARC (advance review copy). Her English isn’t perfect. Suspicious, you move to delete it. Your publisher won’t send books out of the country anyway.

Hang on. Check out her blog. Whoa, this young Brazilian woman has 10,000+ followers, close to a million pageviews, reviews posted for the season’s hottest YA novels, and relationships with a long list of Brazilian publishers. Write her back!

About four months after my novel Sing Me to Sleep (Penguin/Razorbill, 2009) released, I received such a request. I didn’t delete it. I had a few ARCs left. Why not take a chance? I sent one to Brazil and answered interview questions. After the initial review went up, I received more and more requests. Deciding it was worth the investment, I sent several more, and several bloggers created book tours, sending my books from one blogger to another. I did interview after interview. They translated my answers—and usually posted them in both English and Portuguese.

Because I enjoyed existing relationships with international blogger reviewers, shipping ARCs to Brazil wasn’t out of the norm for me. Having lived abroad, I knew how hungry readers around the world are. English is the universal language of business. Students everywhere study English. They watch American television and movies. Reading a foreign language is easier than speaking or writing it. Further exposure in an up-and-coming market could yield a foreign rights deal.

And even if that didn’t happen, I understood that more and more books published in the United States are finding international readers. Services from Amazon to the Book Depository reach readers around the globe, especially with ebooks and devices like the new international Kindle. Websites like Goodreads have readers worldwide posting reviews. The YA blogging craze doesn’t stop at your border. There are no boundaries in cyberspace.

And maybe, if you bug your publisher enough with updates of reviews and interviews, they’ll shoot an e-mail to their agent in the target country in question. I ended up being featured on about thirty YA review blogs in Brazil. Six months later, Penguin signed a contract for Sing Me to Sleep to be published in Brazil.

Some of my favorite international bloggers include:

» Bee at talkmusebanter.blogspot.com in India
» Jo at onceuponabookcase.blogspot.com in the UK
» Raila at booksoutofthebookshelves.blogspot.com in Brazil
» Regie at theundercoverbooklover.blogspot.com in the Philippines
» Amber at serenehours.blogspot.com in Vietnam
» Iris at www.literalementefalando.com.br in Brazil
» Eloisa at www.mientraslees.com in Spain
» Lucia at the-itzel-library.blogspot.com in Mexico
» Jess at sheknownasjess.blogspot.com in Australia
» Aik at aik-friendsfamily.blogspot.com in Malaysia

I always:

1. investigate the blog and make sure it’s legitimate. If the blogger doesn’t include a link to their blog, ask for it.
2. sincerely compliment the blogger’s English. They’re usually nervous about it and always better at English than I am at any foreign language.
3. ask international bloggers to share my review books with other bloggers—either casually with acquaintances or via a book tour they organize. This can bloom into something quite amazing. Lucia at Itzel Library put together a huge tour of Hispanic blogs featuring both my YA books—and translated all the interview questions and my answers.
4. happily grant requests for an interview. I’m very selective regarding the bloggers I mail books to. When I have to say no, I always offer to answer interview questions.
5. double-check the address. International mailings cost between $10 and $18, so you don’t want to make mistakes. Check the Book Depository. Even with free or discounted review copies from your publisher, it might be less expensive to use.
6. ask them to send a link when the post is up so I can blog, tweet, and FB it up.
7. refuse to send electronic copies. If you have access to safeguarded ebooks and permission from your publisher or can get your publisher to send them, this might be a viable, inexpensive option, but it ups the risks of pirating. I have heard suspicions of black marketers posing as international bloggers, but have no evidence of this personally. Be careful, though.
I’m confident you’ll find the international blogging community as welcoming and enthusiastic as I did. Sit back, relax, and enjoy a book tour around the world—without ever leaving your bedroom.

Along with that have been reports about the demise of the press release. News releases are definitely still with us, but require new thinking to be effective.

Today, releasing news is about sharing, creating conversation, and using links, keywords, and multimedia to engage your audience. Of course there are tools to help present your story in a more dynamic way. PitchEngine is one designed to create social media releases, and I asked founder Jason Kintzler for his thoughts.

1. What need was PitchEngine created to address, and how has it evolved over time?

It was built as an alternative to the traditional press release and push distribution process. Instead of sending documents via e-mail or newswires, for the first time, PR pros could easily package up their own branded content into a single Web page. Before PitchEngine, press releases were for journalists almost exclusively, and PDFs and image e-mail attachments were the norm. It has evolved into a tool for businesses and organizations of all sizes to get the word out to their customers, fans, and other online influencers. It's one part content creation, two parts storytelling.

2. What do you think is most important in effective promotion today?

Authenticity. People are savvy to the traditional “push” marketing methods. People follow people, not businesses. Be real, be conversational, and interact with consumers and fans in authentic ways. Then, when you do have the need to “pitch,” it isn’t unexpected or annoying to your audience. They follow YOU and realize YOU are your business. The saying holds true for social media as well: Do unto others as you would have done to you. ;)

3. What tools do you recommend for authors and illustrators who may not have a big budget, but are willing to put in the time to promote their books?

Facebook is number one. It’s where more than half of every Internet user already is. Make sure you are there and interacting with your friends and fans.

YouTube, Vimeo, and a Flip camera are priceless. It doesn’t cost much to create a quick video. Again, people follow people, not businesses or books. Let people make a connection with you and they’ll come back for more, again and again.

PitchEngine provides a great way to tell your story or summarize your book. Websites are good, but hard to create, and even harder to optimize for search engines, etc. Social networks are great for cultivating and sharing with your audience, but they aren’t for storytelling. PitchEngine fills this role. Package up your content and share it on your site, social networks, search, and more.

4. What emerging trends do you see as key for marketing?

Mobile and tablet devices are big. Other countries are somewhat ahead of us in this arena—mostly because they didn’t have the PC adoption that we did in previous decades. The more relevant and easily accessible your content can be, the better. Look for ways to help your audience connect. (When I’m at a public place for dinner with my kids, there’s nothing better for us than to find an interesting cartoon for our two-year-old to watch on YouTube via iPhone for a distraction when things are getting a little crazy. Be a solution and a resource at the same time.)

5. What about the press release specifically? Do you think that’s still a key publicity tool, and what other formats do you think are effective?

Well, I think the days of the traditional press release are long gone. Black-and-white, AP format copy just isn’t engaging anymore. Content consumers (which include journalists as well as consumers) like to be engaged. Images, video, illustrations, whatever. What is still cool about the press release is the utility. Make your content accessible and sharable so that bloggers, journalists, and fans can evangelize for you. That’s when the word will get out. ☺️
Everything you could possibly need to know to create books for children is on the Web, a lot of it in blogs. But with blogs being published by everyone from anonymous editors to MFA programs, where do you begin?

We're taking a tip from the bucket lists and must-see travel guides. Here are fifty-two kidlit blogs you'll want to check out at least once—explore one a week for a year, perhaps—along with tips for using your surfing time effectively.

Prioritize what you want. Blogs exist for different reasons, and their readers reap different rewards. Are you after how-to tips? Moral support? Industry news? Lively debate? Shared deadlines? Friends? Almost anything you're after can be found in a blog, at least part of the time.

“Sometimes it’s just the experience of reading something beautiful,” says Mirka Breen, author of The Voice of Thunder. “But the surprise revelation of my dip into the blogosphere is that blogs become company and remind me of pulsating hearts out there.”

While that connection is important to many, you'll enjoy blogs most efficiently if you identify what you most want but can't get elsewhere (such as your in-person critique group). Click first to those blogs that reliably provide it, create your own don’t-miss list, and leave the “also fun” blogs for spare time.

Participate. The community that develops among readers who comment is a key benefit of many blogs. Discussions keep things lively, so add your perspective, too.

Watch the procrastination factor. You literally could read kidlit blogs all day long—especially if you use them as an anxiety crutch, as described in an insightful post by The Intern (bit.ly/JbMK02). Don’t let them cut into your own creation time. One good strategy is to set aside a finite time, such as thirty minutes a day or an hour on Sundays, to read and comment. Then get to work.

Subscribe to favorites. Although the distinction between a blog and a website is blurring, most blogs have RSS feeds or similar methods of getting new posts by e-mail or in a reader.

Don’t be afraid to move on. Most blogs wax and wane with the blogger’s interest level, life events, and career demands, and each year’s debut authors often start new ones. If a fabulous blog fades or ends, don’t despair. Just move on. There’s always another great blog (or Yahoo group or Twitterchat or NewFangledThang) to discover.

A book trailer has the same function as a movie trailer. It’s a short film that introduces an audience to a story, generating excitement and building anticipation. Book trailers can vary widely, from movie-style live-action trailers, to an author talking about their book, to pictures and text that give a brief synopsis.

Though making trailers is a popular marketing trend for authors and publishers, book trailers can be an expensive and complicated endeavor. This publishing guide will help you decide if you need a trailer for your book and, if so, how to go about creating one.

Do I need one?
This is the first and most important question you must ask yourself when considering a book trailer. Trailers must be thought about as one piece of a larger promotional picture. Authors and publishers have a finite amount of resources when it comes to marketing, and there can be a lot to do: website design, printing bookmarks, swag, funding a book tour, etc. A book trailer might be a wonderful use of marketing resources, creating buzz about your book. Or you might find another way to create this buzz and a different use for your time and money.

The goal of a book trailer is the same as putting a best-selling author’s blurb on your front cover or a gripping synopsis on the jacket flap: to get people to pick up and read your book. Therefore, just like your book, your trailer must have a hook. Something that will set it apart from other trailers. Something that will get it shared and reshared with potential readers across the Internet. If you don’t have the resources or interest in creating a trailer that will captivate potential readers and buyers, consider skipping it. There are many other compelling ways to spend marketing money.

After all, having no book trailer is better than having a bad book trailer.

Who pays for a book trailer?
That depends. Most book trailers are paid for by the author, out of their own pocket. Occasionally, publishing houses will both pay for and create trailers for their books. Make sure to have a conversation with your editor about this so that you are on the same page when it comes to trailers.

Who is my audience?
If you are writing middle grade or picture books, much of the audience for your book trailer will be parents, teachers, and librarians. Consider what these people look for when they are picking out books for children. Author interviews can be a good choice for these genres.

If you are writing young adult fiction, then your target audience is your readers. Think about how to captivate teens and get them excited about your story. Book bloggers, librarians, and parents might also watch your book trailer, but they are not your target audience.

What are my resources?
If you need to fund your own book promotion, think about what your resources are and build your marketing plan around them, rather than the other way around. In terms of a trailer, make a list of your resources in each area.

» Money: A book trailer can cost anywhere from $50 to over $10,000. Think about what you want to spend for your total book promotion. What portion of that can you spend on making a trailer?

» Skills: Do you write music? Know how to shoot or edit movies? Are you an artist who can animate? Be honest with yourself when thinking about your abilities. Can you do these things in a way that will feel professional?

» Friends, family, and community: What skills do your friends have? Do these skills lend themselves to book trailers? Are there film schools nearby where students might be able to help with your endeavor?

» Locations: Do you have any locations for filming at your disposal that would fit your book?

Once you’ve taken a look at your resources, think about how you might be able to build a trailer around your strengths.

» Have a friend who composes music? Make the sound track do the work, letting the music carry the tension, drama, or romance of your story.
Have a stunning location that works for your book? Spend your money getting great footage of the setting and let it tell your story.

If you’ve discovered resources that would fit a different promotion better, consider taking that path.

So! You want to make a book trailer? Then let’s get started!

1. Dreaming Up a Concept
Planning is free! Since creating trailers can be time- and money-intensive, it’s important to maximize the planning stage. There are an endless variety of book trailers you can create (live-action, animated, text and pictures, author interview etc.), and these planning techniques can be helpful for all of them.

Ask yourself these questions to get started.

» What is the tone of your trailer?
» What scenes/moments from your book do you want to convey? Think visually. Think about critical moments of your plot. Think about moments that tell a lot about your characters.
» What is it about your book that you want to get across to your readers? That it’s a thriller or a romance or funny? Introduce your main character? Introduce the setting?
» What is your book’s hook? Can it be the hook for your trailer, too?
» How much time do you have to create the trailer? Keep in mind that most trailers come out at least a month before their books. Also, talk to your editor: If you want your publisher to help your trailer get exposure or put it up on Amazon, they may want it two months in advance of your release date.
» What is the scope and ambition of your trailer? Create A, B, and C scenarios for your trailer: A—if you had all the time and money you needed; B—if you had a more modest budget and time frame; and C—the bare minimum of what you want to create. This way you can dream big, but still be flexible based on your resources.

2. Making a Plan You Can Share
Most people don’t have the skills to create a great trailer on their own, and that’s okay! This second planning stage can give you a clear idea of what you want to create and give you a way to get other people interested in your project. It will also allow you to be sure that you and anyone you’re working with are on the same page.

» Create a Lookbook: Collect images from movies, magazines, online, and real life that communicate the feel of your book. Think about specific moments, what your characters wear, what they look like, what their world looks like. These images can bring your concept to life. These pictures are only for inspiration, not to be used in the actual trailer, so you don’t need to worry about copyrights at this point.
» Music: Music is vital to your trailer, but is easy to overlook. Who would Darth Vader be without “The Imperial March”? What would Jaws be without that insistent, menacing sound track? Listen for music that communicates the feel and tone of your story and start there.
» Write a Rough Draft of Your Trailer: Remember, a trailer is a bit like a picture book. Let the visuals do at least half of the work. Don’t let the script repeat information you will be seeing on the screen. Use short, direct phrases; type up scripts from movie trailers you like to get a feel for the style. Read your scripts out loud to check for pacing and tone. Keep the whole trailer short: Ideally, your trailer should range from thirty seconds to two minutes. Think of communicating the idea of your book, not the story itself. It’s important not to get caught up in the details.

Create a Shotlist/List of Scenes: A shotlist is an ordered list of shots to be filmed, including camera angles. While you probably don’t need to get this detailed, creating a list of scenes/images/visuals to accompany the script is helpful.

Watch Out! Don’t get obsessed with getting the story details exact. The trailer is not your book, it’s merely a taste of it. Allow yourself to combine scenes and change times of day or what someone is wearing if it means creating a better trailer.

Also, some things can make creating a trailer exponentially more complicated: multiple locations/scenes/montages, using kids, and using animals. You don’t have to avoid these completely, just be aware of what you are getting into when planning your trailer.

3. Approaching Other People
Now that you have a concept you can share, it’s time to get other people involved and excited! Remember, if you ask people to volunteer their time and talents, then your trailer becomes a collaboration. Be flexible, open, and attentive to other people’s ideas. There is a reason you are coming to them for help!

» Friends: Approach friends with your lookbook and see if they would be interested in helping. They might surprise you with ideas and resources of their own!
» Film and Theater Schools: Know a film student or actor? Students can be a source of innovative ideas and talent. Remember to be open to collaboration.
» Production Companies: Using a production company will significantly increase the cost of a book trailer, but can also get professional results. If you go this route, be careful that the trailer doesn’t look too much like a commercial.
» Online: Happily, you can find people online to do voiceovers and create visual effects and music. You can listen to and look at work samples in order to choose someone who fits your vision. There also are many online resources for pictures. With all of these, be very careful to get permission to use anything in your trailer. If you purchase pictures, be aware that prices can vary based on size and terms of use. (See Online Resources sidebar.)

4. Getting Your Trailer Out in the World
Now that you’ve made a book trailer, what do you do with it?

» Releasing Your Trailer: First, talk to your editor. Book trailers can debut in many places, from traditional media sites like Entertainment Weekly or Seventeen to book websites and blogs. In rare cases, they can even be shown in movie theaters. Even if you paid for and created the book trailer yourself, your publisher might have good ideas and contacts to get your trailer shown in interesting places. On the other hand, you as the author can always approach book bloggers or other websites and ask them to debut your trailer. Keep in mind that some websites will want exclusivity for the first few days the trailer is released.
» Where Else? YouTube and Vimeo are easy and expected places for people to find your book trailer. Once you’ve uploaded your trailer to YouTube or Vimeo, you can add that link on your own website, your Goodreads page, and your e-mail signature, share it on Facebook and Twitter, and give it to any bloggers who interview or feature you. You can also add the video to your own author page on Amazon, and your publisher can add the video to your book’s Amazon page as well.

You need to evolve a strategic plan that capitalizes on your strengths, engages consumers, and has sufficient flexibility to evolve with a marketplace that is constantly changing. Each follows logically from the other, once you have a clear picture of the role you want to play.

The first step is to consider the industry as it pertains to you and your work. Ask yourself why you’ve chosen to come into the market now. Are you pursuing a passion to publish a particular kind of work, or for a particular kind of reader? Did you recognize a need in the marketplace that you’re particularly qualified to fill? Are you entering an underserved or overcrowded part of the market in terms of type of consumer, genre, or format? How are you entering the market—will you self-publish, start your own publishing entity, or publish with a small or large publisher, and will you publish a print book or go directly to digital? Once you have the answers to those questions, it’s time to consider how that will affect your timing, presentation, and strategy.

Define your platform. This is a core issue and incorporates both why you’ve chosen to publish now and what need you intend to fulfill. Start by researching what has been published previously on the same topic or similar to your book. Set up Google Alerts to get notified of new and forthcoming books that relate to what you’re doing. Look for similarities and points of differentiation. Also compare timing. Is your book for a different type of consumer? Is the perspective fresh or original in a way you can demonstrate? Can you benefit from timing, either because there hasn’t been anything like yours in a while or because there is current interest in something related to your project?

Outline your objectives. You need to think about your objectives for each book and how they fit with your career as a whole. Does the book represent a key step in your publishing career? Is it a first book, the beginning of a series, one that will introduce you to a different type of consumer? This will help determine the type and extent of the marketing you’ll want to do. If it is a book that serves your core or existing customer base, consider what has worked well for others working in that space, or if you have a track record, what you can do to engage with them in a new or creative way. Consider your strengths and weaknesses. Are you tied in with the school market? Are you a good public speaker or journalist? Are you active in social media and set up to do traditional media outreach? Do you see yourself connecting via gatekeepers—parents, teachers, librarians—or going directly to your end consumer—readers?

Identify your opportunities. Now you’re ready to look at what can be done to move forward with your goals. Start by looking at the tools you have and the processes you can easily put in place. Do you have a good contact database, media list, and e-mail system (e.g. Constant Contact, Mail Chimp) that you can use for regular outreach? Are you set up with Facebook, Twitter, and LinkedIn accounts? What about Pinterest and Google+? Look at what others in your space have done to generate interest and excitement. Do they do giveaways and contests? Are they positioning themselves as experts or news makers, or trying to become popular with their fan base (which is often the case with the teen market)? Can you speak at conferences, do public events, or be brought in to teach on a topic?

Consider your resources. There’s a lot of ground to cover, so it’s helpful to have others who will play a role in the marketing process. If you have a publisher, they will certainly play a role, but what that will be will vary depending on a variety of factors. If you’ve published with the company before, then it will depend on your track record and status with the publisher. If not, then it will depend on the potential they see for your book and what they’re set up to do to promote it. The more information you can find out about this, the better, but know that it’s only one aspect of what you need to do to promote your work. The big difference here is that the publisher will focus on the books you publish with them, while your work needs to focus on evolving your reputation and career as a whole and over the long term.

Ask yourself what alliances and connections you can make that can provide you with more resources and capabilities than you might have on your own. There are many answers to this, including working in peer groups with other authors or illustrators who have shared goals, looking at services and tools you can use to make the work easier and quicker. This can include buying advertising or paid placement on newswires (PRWeb, PRNewswire, Marketwire), using social media aggregators (HootSuite, TweetDeck), and contracting with agencies for publicity services, blog tours, or to generate content (to blog, tweet, or post) for you.

Craft your message. You need an overarching idea and consistent messaging to help the gatekeepers and consumers understand your brand. The more you can identify and convey what you represent in the marketplace, the better chance you’ll have of evolving a following for your work. This should carry over from one platform to the next—in your promotional copy, your publicity, your social media outreach, and the speaking you do. It’s also important to have your publisher and anyone else who is involved with your marketing have a clear understanding of the larger concept you want to convey.

Define and execute tour plan. Now that you’ve identified your objectives, know the kind of outreach you want to do, and have your messaging in place, it’s time to prioritize and execute your campaign. For the best results, consider testing some of your ideas on a small sampling of contacts. You may find that while the idea is good, the timing isn’t advantageous; or that there’s less response to a given mechanism than you thought there might be. You can always start small and then expand marketing in a given area once you get a read on what’s most effective. Timing is important, so you should know when early and finished copies of your book will be available—this is true with both print and digital—and when it should be sampled to different segments of the market. In pitching for events, you want to give potential hosts as much lead time as possible to fit you into their schedules. With publicity outreach, your timing will vary by the type of outlet (long lead for print and broadcast, short for online and social). Know that follow-up will be a big part of the equation and that you should be prepared to do strategic advance outreach to contacts to ensure good results. Make sure that you’ve established a presence with a website and with social media and are prepared to update and engage on a regular schedule. This doesn’t mean that you have to do each one-by-one or with a calendar in hand. You can certainly set up to post simultaneously to multiple platforms and can preschedule your posts to be written at your convenience. Think in terms of multimedia, with book trailers, YouTube, podcasting, Pinterest, and even games. People like when material is presented in visual and audio media and love interactivity.

Evaluate your results. Each situation is different. What works for one book at a particular stage of your career will not be the same as what may work for another. Certainly conditions in the market will change as well. What’s the economy like? Which parts of the market have a budget to spend? Is there competition that can help or hurt you? What genre or age bracket is trending? With the lead time required to write and produce a book, you can’t know these things in advance. So you need to be prepared to recognize these realities when the time comes and adjust your plans accordingly.

Be confident that your efforts will make a difference. Marketing is a long-term process that needs to evolve. It takes dedication and persistence to succeed. There is no crystal ball to tell you exactly what will happen, but you can succeed if you’re prepared to work strategically and creatively.
Check out these great festivals and conferences to share your books with readers all over the country. These not only offer you the chance to promote your books, but they also serve to connect you with other speaking opportunities. Book festivals are the perfect place to connect with local teachers, librarians and reviewers. They can also introduce you to readers in the parts of the country. You might even want to schedule your next vacation around attending one. Keep in mind, though, that they often have their authors lined up months before the event. Make contact early!

DOING SCHOOL VISITS IN THE UNITED STATES
As you prepare to do school visits, you’ll need to know how to plan and shape your presentation, explore venues that are gateways to obtaining school visits, set fees, prepare contracts and agreements, promote your availability, follow up with clients, deal with common concerns, and reinforce the value of school visits.

PLANNING AND SHAPING YOUR PRESENTATION

The most common question authors ask about school visits is “How do I get a school to hire me?” But the most important question is “What will I do when I get there that will make a difference in the lives of audience members?” In other words, school visits are not just about reading a story aloud to a group of children.

Your book is published. The next step is to plan your presentation and promote the ideas that your book represents. A quality presentation creates buzz that motivates others to hire you to do school visits.

Observe Other Presenters

The first step in planning any presentation is observing other authors and illustrators in action at a variety of venues. For example, ask SCBWI PAL members who have written in the same genres as your books—picture books, novels, nonfiction—if you can shadow them at a school. Take notes on what works, what doesn’t. When are the audiences restless? When are they most attentive? How do presenters involve audiences in meaningful ways? Picture yourself in the spotlight and what you would do with an audience. Consider setting up a buddy system with other authors to exchange observations and ideas related to presentations.

Understanding How School Assemblies Work

In-person school visits are more common in elementary schools than in middle schools or high schools. Because of scheduling challenges, middle school and high school visits can be virtual (Skype), targeted to smaller groups (content area classes), or a single class.

Most schools expect the greatest number of students to benefit from your visit, so large assemblies are common. Elementary school assemblies are usually divided by grade levels: primary (kindergarten through grade 3) and intermediate (grade 4 through grade 6). Most authors create one kind of presentation for the primary grade students and a different one for the intermediate grade students. Typical assemblies are thirty to forty minutes for grades K–3 and forty-five to sixty minutes for grades 4–6.

Content

Decide what your big-picture presentation goal is. What do you want the audience to be able to do as a result of having heard you? For example, do you want them to be able to apply a specific writing skill in the classroom? Write letters related to a cause? Draw a special item or character? Identify a specific aspect of your own writer’s journey and process that they can apply to their own creative endeavors?

Divide your presentation into three parts: Beginning, middle, and end. It helps if you map out an attention-getting opening and a solid closing. The middle, then, can be adjusted to suit time limits, venues, or the age of the audiences. If you choose to incorporate a formal question-and-answer segment, consider placing it at the end of your middle segment so that you can close on a unifying high note with the whole group.

Choose visuals that complement your assembly story (e.g., family photographs, your book, drafts and revisions, props, artifacts, costumes) and make sure that they can be seen clearly at the back of the room.
Projecting PowerPoint slides of smaller items you bring along helps enormously.

Interaction
Include ways to involve the audience in your presentation (e.g., calling on students to assist with equipment, props, acting out parts of your book, being a model for a drawing). Interactions that involve student volunteers are not only ego-boosting to the volunteers, but a source of pride for the students in the volunteers’ classes.

Elementary schools with high populations of students who are second-language learners especially appreciate whole-group interaction (e.g., employing rhythmic activities such as clapping, finger-snapping, arm motions, or reciting poems and singing songs).

Presentation Tools
Decide what kinds of equipment or props you will need for your presentation (e.g., PowerPoint slide sequence, LCD projector, flash drive, newsprint pad, microphone, audio speakers). Determine what you will bring with you and what you need your host to provide.

Workshops
You may decide to offer workshops on an aspect of writing, researching, or illustrating. Usually these run between forty-five and sixty minutes. Some authors limit workshops to older students; some offer different ones according to grade levels. Because a school representative has to accompany you when you work with students, you can use them to assist you with handing out materials and crowd control.

Practice
Don’t expect to be fabulous (or to charge a fee) right out of the gate. Enlist the assistance of a local teacher or librarian and practice your presentation with small groups in classrooms and libraries, working your way up to larger ones. During these “rehearsals,” ask a teacher, librarian, or SCBWI colleague to give you feedback on your program. Based on feedback from others and from your own take on your experience, modify your presentation until you come up with programs that work best.

TYPES OF VENUES
Here are some common venues for author and illustrator presentations, including venues that offer gateways to school visit hosts:

Students (the primary audience for author and illustrator visits)
» Schools (public and private, for assemblies, workshops, residencies)
» Libraries (public and school for large group programs, workshops)

Adults and children together (usually all ages)
» Libraries (public story times, summer reading programs, family events)
» Schools (family nights, young author fairs)
» Bookstores (independent and chain for author programs, educator nights, and book signings)
» Book festivals or literacy festivals (school, city, or regional)

Adults (where contacts for school and library visits are often made)
» Professional conferences (local, state, and national associations for reading, library, and specific school subject areas; organizations for writers and illustrators)
» Service clubs (Rotary, Lions, Kiwanis, Zonta, Assistance League)

SETTING FEES
You are a professional, not a professional volunteer. Professionals charge a fee for their services. But how much should you charge for your school visits and other presentations? Here are some guidelines.
» Research local markets: What are others in your region with similar experience (number of books, background) charging for in-person school visits? Honoraria often fall within these three categories:
  » $500–$1,000
  » $1,000–$2,000
  » $2,000 and up
» Most authors charge for expenses (travel, lodging, food) on top of the fee; others charge a flat, inclusive fee.
» Research national markets: Your publisher is likely to have an author visit section on its website or employ an author visit coordinator. See what others with similar experience charge and position yourself accordingly.
» Bookstore visits are generally free as a courtesy to the booksellers.
» Author festivals and book festivals range from free to low fee, unless you are a main-stage attraction.
» Professional conferences range from free to low fee or in-kind payment (i.e., admission to the conference), unless you deliver a keynote address.
» Virtual school visits (by Skype, etc.) generally range from free to $500, depending on the length of the visit.

Some authors offer a menu of options with fees for:
» full-day bookings
» half-day bookings
» each separate assembly or presentation
» keynote addresses
» virtual school visits

Many offer discounts for:
» multiple-day bookings in the same region
» visits to two separate schools within close proximity in the same day

CONTRACTS & AGREEMENTS
It is to everyone’s benefit to spell out in writing the terms and conditions of your appearance (i.e., schedule, setup, compensation, book sales, cancellation policy). This can be done via e-mail, through a letter of agreement, or as a formal contract. (This SCBWI Publication Guide includes a Sample Lecture Contract on page 255 that you can adopt or adapt.) The more you iron out in advance, the fewer surprises will greet you.

PROMOTING YOUR AVAILABILITY
Most people who request an author visit are doing so based on the author’s or illustrator’s body of work, locality (travel fees are a consideration), and presentation fee. But in the end, word-of-mouth recommendations from trusted sources trump everything. So how do you let teachers, librarians, parents, and booksellers know that you are available to do school visits and other appearances?

Create an author or illustrator website. Be visible on social media sites where your work can be seen by potential hosts.
Be active in your own community and become known locally as a published author or illustrator. Introduce yourself to your SCBWI regional advisor, booksellers, librarians, and community news reporters. Participate in local literacy organizations.

Distribute brochures, postcards, bookmarks, or business cards at events in which you participate.

Join speakers’ lists maintained by professional organizations to which you belong, such as the SCBWI, the Authors Guild, the Children’s Book Council, and local literacy groups. Make sure that you are included on your publisher’s author visit list as well.

Offer to be a luncheon speaker for local service clubs (Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, etc.).

Do performance showcases with other local authors and illustrators (typically three or more per showcase) for local booksellers, libraries, county education offices, art galleries, or PTA/PTO councils.

Participate in book fairs, festivals, literary events, bookstore educator nights, and library summer reading programs. Contact the event organizer to see how you can assist.

Propose a workshop or session, on your own or with colleagues, for your state’s regional or state conferences for reading teachers, school library/media specialists, or subject matter specialists. Professional conferences provide excellent gateways to meeting potential hosts.

Send an e-mail to local booksellers—including contact information, basic information about your book(s), ideas for a bookstore event, and availability—about three to six months in advance of a proposed program.

Before the close of the school year, send a brochure to local PTA/PTO program chairpersons telling of your availability to do assemblies during the following school year.

FOLLOW UP

If you want to gather testimonials about your school visits, provide your hosts with a simple evaluation form or link to an online questionnaire to distribute to teachers after your visit. And if you want to cement your reputation as a thoughtful presenter, follow up your visit with a handwritten thank-you note to the host. Building relationships is important!

COMMON CONCERNS AND SOLUTIONS

Negotiating a Fee

You may be asked in person or by e-mail, “What do you charge?” Follow up by sending your price list via e-mail. Another tactic is to ask the potential client, “What’s your budget?” and then be prepared to say “I can work with that,” negotiate a fee, or turn the offer down. If you do have to turn down an event, refer the client to a colleague who might be within their range. When you show concern for a client’s needs, they are more likely to keep you in mind for a future event.

Equipment Failure

Expect the unexpected and be prepared! Can you do your presentation without images? With props only? If not, consider carrying along backup equipment, including your own computer, a flash drive containing your PowerPoint presentation, an extension cord, and, if possible, your own LCD projector. If this is difficult to do, print your PowerPoint show images on paper and display them on a document camera that projects images, commonly called an Elmo, which most schools have in classrooms today. (FYI: Matte paper projects better than glossy.)

Controlling the Crowd

Schools love it when you can handle a group on your own and teachers don’t have to intervene. Here are some ways to keep the audience focused on your presentation.

Set up the room so that everyone can see and hear you. If the group is large, it helps to make an aisle in the middle and use a portable microphone—or one with a long cord—so that you can move closer to form a bond with the audience and address issues quickly.

Say hello to students at the door as they walk into the room. Demonstrate what your silent “quiet down” signal is. (e.g., two hands in the air, a peace sign) as it becomes necessary.

To resettle students, be clear about the behavior you require. For example, say, “Okay, everyone—crisscross applesauce,” or, “Let me see all of you sit on your pockets!” or “One-two-three, eyes on me!”

If you ask for student volunteers, be clear about how you will choose kids. For example, “I’ll be calling on kids who are crisscross applesauce, hands raised, who show me with their face, and not with their words, that they’d like to help me.” Or perhaps explain, “First I’ll be calling on girls and then on some boys.” Clarity helps.

If students (or teachers) are chatting, move closer and look at them. If they don’t stop, you might cover your microphone and with great concern ask, “Is everything okay?” This usually ends their conversation.

If the audience becomes excited during a lively part of your presentation, wait for them to settle before you continue.

The best way to head off crowd control issues in the first place is to have a riveting presentation!

Selling Books

Not all schools will want to sell your book. Often this is because the host doesn’t have experience or volunteer-power to do so. While schools can order books directly from publishers, independent booksellers will offer the best support, especially if you have books published at more than one house. Pass the bookseller’s contact information to your host and have them work together. Alert the bookseller to the date of your visit. Create a book order form and send it to your host to use or adapt. Send along summaries of your books. If the host still doesn’t want to do a sale, bring order forms with you so that teachers can place orders after your event.

THE VALUE OF SCHOOL VISITS

Staying in front of audiences keeps your books alive and your publishers happy. But becoming skilled at the craft and business of doing school visits doesn’t happen overnight, so take the advice in this article in small doses.

It’s difficult to quantify the exact effect and reach resulting from authors and illustrators interacting with students in schools. Yet you will receive fan letters throughout your career testifying to the life-changing impact you have had on young audiences. An author’s in-person meeting with students percolates for years—in a dawning of the type of books children choose, in the volume of books children read, in the validation of children’s own creativity as writers and artists, in the choosing of future careers. And this is why children’s authors and illustrators are dedicated to meeting young readers face-to-face, sharing a love of books.

If you are a published author or illustrator, consider combining some world travel with visits to international schools. This Guide to International School Visits provides helpful information, and the companion Directory of International Schools (see www.scbwi.org under “Resource Library”) provides a list of schools around the world that schedule author and illustrator visits, as well as contact information and details of the number of visits and time of year preferred. The following tips will help you plan successful international school visits.

Are you qualified?
Qualification depends on several factors. Large schools in the more populated cities around the world may invite big-name, award-winning authors. However, schools in more remote areas and those with smaller budgets may be eager to invite lesser known authors. To determine whether you are qualified or not, besides notoriety, consider the following: Are you a PAL (Published and Listed) member of SCBWI? (Note that many librarians are reluctant to consider visits by authors or illustrators of self-published books.) Do your books have universal appeal? Are you experienced? Have you done plenty of school visits before? Do you have something unique to offer? Do you have a website? You should be able to answer “yes” to all of these questions.

Planning a visit
If you feel you are qualified, after consulting the SCBWI Directory of International Schools and other listings and viewing the schools’ websites and calendars, contact the schools in the area you plan to visit. Some schools are flexible with regard to timing, but many schools schedule author visits during spring and fall. Most schools wish to be contacted 3–9 months in advance. In addition to sending the librarian or contact person an e-mail with a link to your website and details about the contents of your school programs, be sure to specify what your visit will bring to the students. Will your presentations focus on the process of writing a story, or creating poems, or making illustrations? Is the presentation interactive? Will you include a storytelling performance? Do your presentations tie in to particular study units? Indicate what age groups your presentations are geared toward, and remember that the wider the range, the better your chances of being invited. However, also keep in mind the school’s organization; some schools share a librarian and author visit funding across grades, but other schools have separate elementary, middle school and high school librarians.

Let the librarian or contact person know well in advance if you will require any particular physical arrangements in a room or special equipment. Most, but not all, international schools have projectors, screens, and computers readily available.

If you hope to sell books or to have students read your books before the visit, discuss this with the librarian far in advance of your visit. Not all schools will handle book sales. If the school is willing to handle book sales, give the librarian the contact details of your publisher, but keep in mind that online sales may be easier and cheaper than overseas shipping by the publisher. Many schools offer students a book order form and purchase the pre-ordered books prior to the author visit. Whatever the arrangement, it is extremely important to discuss clearly with the organizing librarian well in advance of your visit.

If you will visit several schools in a region, ask if one librarian can act as a coordinator to handle the details of local transportation, meals, accommodation, etc. If this is not possible, be sure to gather this information yourself, as schools may not always communicate with each other to get you from one place to another.

Guidelines for fees
Many international schools receive funding for author/illustrator visits from Parent Teacher Associations. There are huge differences in what schools can offer for fees. Minimum daily fees for four sessions per day vary from author to author, and what you charge should be in line with your experience and your notoriety. Schools pay more for well-published, award-winning authors who are known to give outstanding presentations or workshops. In addition to the daily fee, many, but not all, schools offer hotel accommodations, or a portion of these costs. Lunch is usually provided by the school, and dinner with the librarian and some teachers may be covered by the school. Economy class, round trip airfare is sometimes paid for or shared by several schools in the same region. In some cases, however, airfare is not included at all. Some schools provide only local transportation. Average daily fees for four sessions per day for a well-published author seem to be about $500–$700 USD ($125–$175 USD per session). An award-winning Caldecott or Newbery author might charge $2,000 USD per day, but very few international schools can afford this. Note that payment is generally made in the local currency on the day of the visit.

Contract

Although it may be common in some cultures to prepare a formal contract for a school visit, not all cultures or schools follow this practice. However, after negotiations, an e-mail letter of agreement that includes the overall content of the program, date of visit, schedule, book sale arrangements, your fee and any expenses to be covered such as transportation, food, and accommodation, as well as contact phone numbers, should certainly be exchanged to confirm arrangements.

Guidelines for your school presentation

Most international schools are composed of teachers and children from many different countries, cultures and belief systems. Be prepared to speak to an international audience of children whose collective experiences and roots may span many cultures.

Closely review your books and determine whether there are topics, words, or concepts with which the children might not be familiar. Be prepared to explain whatever content may be unique to your culture. Determine in advance if there might be any culturally sensitive material in your books. Be considerate and respectful of the various cultures represented in the school. Do not assume that all children will be familiar with North American culture.

Ask in advance about the English abilities of the children you will address. If you will have many non-native speakers of English in the audience, plan to use clear, simple English.

Extras

If you are willing to critique sample writings or illustrations by students, let the librarians and teachers know this. Be sure to communicate how many stories or illustrations you are willing to read and comment on (perhaps a select number of pieces by older students who are interested in writing or a select number of illustrations by serious art students). This may be appreciated by teachers and librarians and a thrill for students.

If there is an SCBWI chapter in the country you will visit, contact the Regional Advisor well in advance (3–9 months). SCBWI regional chapters may wish to invite you to give a presentation or conduct a workshop for local authors and illustrators.

Dos and Don’ts

Don’t expect a librarian or the school to act as a personal guide to the country. A local tour is sometimes included as an extra, but should not be expected.

Don’t expect the SCBWI Regional Advisor of the country you will visit to act as your personal travel agent. Do your own homework on the area you will visit.
In response to the many member requests that were received for a Sample Lecture Contract for school speaking engagements, member Sheri Cooper Sinykin sent us what she developed for her own use. We have adapted her contract for you. You may wish to use the entire document, or part of it. Feel free to adapt it to your needs/situation; it is meant as a guide, not an absolute. You will need to negotiate any contract with the sponsoring institution. PLEASE NOTE: For clarity, in some cases we have used the word “Author” rather than “Author or Illustrator.”

LECTURE CONTRACT

AGREEMENT, dated this____ day of __________, 20____, BETWEEN __________________________________________ (Author/Illustrator), whose address is __________________________________________, Phone ____________________________, AND __________________________________________

_______________________________________ School (Sponsor) located at __________________________________________ _______________________________________ School representative: __________________________ School Phone: __________________________

Home Phone: __________________________

WHEREAS, the Sponsor is familiar with the work of the Author and requests that the Author personally visit the Sponsor to enhance the opportunities for its students to have contact with working professional authors; and

WHEREAS, the Author wishes to lecture with respect to (her) work and perform other such services as this contract may call for;

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the foregoing and the mutual covenants set forth herein, the parties hereto agree as follows:

1. AUTHOR TO LECTURE. The Author hereby agrees to travel to the Sponsor’s location on the following date, __________ and speak on (date/s), __________ to _______ (#) audiences of approximately _________ (#) students each. Grades to be addressed are ______ for _______ (length of speaking time). The focus of the presentations shall be:

2. WORK OF AUTHOR. The Sponsor agrees to familiarize the students with the published work of the Author prior to the Author’s appearance.

3. PAYMENT. The Sponsor agrees to pay as full compensation, in addition to expenses, for the Author’s services rendered under Paragraph One the sum of $ ______ per day of speaking. This sum shall be payable to the Author immediately upon completion of services.
4. EXPENSES. In addition, the Sponsor agrees to be responsible for the following expenses:

» Roundtrip travel. (If by the Author’s own car, reimbursement in the amount of 29 cents per mile; if by air or train, the Sponsor shall provide the tickets; if by rental car or other modes of transportation, the Sponsor shall make arrangements with the Author for payment of these expenses).

» Food and lodging. (Sponsor will provide the following meals: If meals are on a per diem basis, the Sponsor shall inform the Author in advance; otherwise the Sponsor agrees to accept and reimburse the Author for food and lodging receipts presented).

» Other specifics. The reimbursement for food, lodging, and other expenses shall be made no later than one week following Author’s visit, unless otherwise agreed to in writing in advance.

5. INABILITY TO PERFORM. If the Author is unable to appear on the dates scheduled in Paragraph One due to illness the Sponsor shall have no obligation to make any payments under Paragraphs Three and Four, but shall attempt to reschedule the Author’s appearance at a mutually acceptable future date. If the Sponsor is prevented from having the Author appear by Acts of God, governmental order, or other cause beyond its control, the Sponsor shall be responsible only for the payment of such expenses under Paragraph Four as the Author shall actually have incurred. The Sponsor agrees in such cases to attempt to reschedule the Author’s appearance at a mutually acceptable future date.

6. CANCELLATION FEE. If Sponsor cancels appearance by Author for any other reason than an act of God, Sponsor agrees to pay Author the full fee agreed upon in Paragraph Three above, in addition to such expenses under Paragraph Four as the Author shall actually have incurred.

7. LATE PAYMENT. The Sponsor agrees that, in the event that it is late in making payments due the Author under Paragraphs Three and Four, it will pay as additional damages 15% in interest on the amounts owing to the Author, said interest to run from the dates stipulated in Paragraphs Three or Four, until such time as payment is made.

8. RECORDINGS. No recording shall be made by the Sponsor without written consent of the Author. In the event Author grants permission to record, Sponsor agrees that the Author shall retain all rights; including copyrights, in “relation to recordings of any kind made of the appearance or any works shown in the course thereof. The term “recording” as used herein shall include any recording made by electrical transcription, wire recording, film, videotape, or other similar or dissimilar method of recording, whether now known or here after developed. No use of any such recording shall be made by the sponsor without the written consent of the Author and, if stipulated therein, additional compensation for such use.

9. BOOK SALE AND AUTOGRAPHING. If Sponsor desires the availability of Author’s books for sale and autographing on the date outlined in Paragraph 1, Sponsor shall be responsible for ordering, collecting money for, distributing and returning unsold books. Author agrees to be available for autographing at the time and place specified above after _______________ (time of day).

If Sponsor wishes to order books directly from the publisher, it must do so approximately eight weeks prior to the Author’s appearance to ensure their arrival in time for the appearance. Book ordering information for the following books is included (below/on separate page).

10. AUDIO-VISUAL AND PHYSICAL ARRANGEMENTS. (Specify everything that you will need, i.e. slide projector and screen, table and chair, etc.) Sponsor will check to make sure that all required equipment is in place and working properly.

11. MODIFICATION. This contract contains the full understanding between the parties hereto and may only be modified in a written instrument signed by both parties.

12. GOVERNING LAW. This contract shall be governed by the laws of the State of _________________________.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have signed this Agreement as of the date first set forth above.
You may not expect to do much public speaking as part of your writing or illustrating career, but it’s likely to be part of how you promote your books. Even if you’ve mastered speaking at school visits, presenting to adults at conferences and public programs is another matter.

For many, the prospect of addressing an audience of peers is daunting. In fact, according to surveys of top fears, public speaking is ranked at or near the top. Why? Because the speaker is not sure how his message will be received and is afraid of being embarrassed. Doing well requires good preparation and presentation skills, and also understanding your audience.

Start by focusing on your audience. In “Speaking Is a Team Sport” (bit.ly/NHRhL1), author and consultant Stefania Lucchetti points out that “most speakers approach their presentation as if they were the star actors in a theater play” whom the audience is excited to see. Instead, “speakers need to take on a perspective that is intensely audience-focused.” So ask for information ahead of time about who is likely to attend and consider what they’d most like to learn from you.

As a double-check, and to share that intent, start your program with an opportunity for the audience to provide direct input. In a small group, that might mean letting them say something about themselves and why they’ve come to hear you. A larger group could fill out cards with questions that you could incorporate as appropriate. If you do take written questions, invite your audience to include their e-mail address so you can reply to those you don’t get to. This will also let you get in touch afterward to invite them to visit your website and link to you on Twitter and Facebook.

When crafting your presentation, know that audiences today have short attention spans. In a recent seminar I attended, the speaker said you could expect a person’s mind to wander off topic in less than fifteen seconds. You’ll also face the added challenge of engaging audience members who are texting, tweeting, or otherwise multitasking. Counteract this by building your presentation around quick sound bites that they can easily remember. Think in terms of “sticky ideas,” defined in Chip and Dan Heath’s book Made to Stick as having six key attributes: simplicity, unexpectedness, concreteness, credibility, emotions, and stories.

During the presentation, change the dynamics periodically, using a variety of visuals and styles of delivery. Avoid common pitfalls, like “I want to tell you everything,” “grab bag,” “shopping list,” and others outlined by Olivia Mitchell in “Speaking about Presenting” (bit.ly/LME6bc). Focus on making the experience memorable, repeat key points, and include action items to encourage the audience to stay connected with you afterward.

Preparation includes not just rehearsal, but materials to encourage further interaction. Provide handouts directing the audience to your website, blog, or newsletter, as well as information sheets or postcards with book information. If the audience is appropriate, have a flier about booking you for school visits and events. For people who speak with you directly, give out a business card listing your website, Twitter, and Facebook information. Offer them something special, such as a discount on a school visit or talk if they contact you and say they attended your presentation.
What is copyright?

Copyright is a set of exclusive rights granted to authors, illustrators and copyright owners for limited times. Under Section 106 of the Copyright Act, copyright owners have these exclusive rights and the exclusive monopoly to authorize others to:

- §106(1) Reproduce the work;
- §106(2) Make derivatives based upon the work;
- §106(3) Distribute copies of the work to the public by sale;
- §106(4) Perform the work publicly;
- §106(5) Display the work publicly;
- §106(6) To publicly perform sound recordings by digital audio transmission.

Copyright is just that: the right to make copies. This exclusive right is given in §106(1). But what good is the exclusive right to make a copy if the author or owner can’t distribute and sell those copies? Those rights are granted in §106(3). Section 106(2) is the exclusive right to make derivatives based on the original work. For authors, this covers the right to translation of their works into foreign languages, audiobooks and adaptations for the stage and screen. For illustrators, derivative works include posters, graphics, videos and even t-shirts using their original art.

Public performance §106(4) and public display rights §106(5), should be considered as twins. You can perform a play or movie, but you can only display a painting or sculpture. The final right of public performance by digital audio transmission §106(6), applies only to sound recordings broadcast on the Internet, digital cable TV or satellite radio.

What can be protected?

Copyright protection covers more than expected. Any original work of an author or artist’s expression, which has been fixed in a tangible form, is protected under the Copyright Act. Although the Act has a list of types of works it shields, it is not an exclusive list. Copyrightable works include, but aren’t limited to the following:

- Literary works;
- Musical works, including any accompanying words;
- Dramatic works, including any accompanying music;
- Pantomimes and choreographic works;
- Pictorial, graphic and sculptural works;
- Motion pictures and other audiovisual works;
- Sound recordings;
- Architectural works.

When does a copyright start?

For works created after 1/1/1978, copyright protection begins the moment the original expression of an author or illustrator’s idea is created and fixed in a tangible form that it is perceptible either directly or with the aid of a machine or device. In other words, copyright starts when the ink is dry on the paper, the artist has put down the brush or the computer file is saved.

There’s no need to file a registration or publish the work to have a copyright, as long as it is in a form that is perceptible either directly or with the aid of a device like a computer or CD player. The general rule is that the person who creates the work owns its copyright from the moment of creation.

What doesn’t copyright protect?

Ideas are not protected, only the tangible expression of those ideas. You may have a great idea for a book, but there’s no protection available for that alone; you have to write the book. Facts are not protected by copyright either, because they’re not original. Titles and short phrases are not copyrightable. They too fail the originality requirement.

Common things are not protected by copyright. You can’t get exclusive rights on a name, short phrase, familiar symbol, list of ingredients or a color. For copyright purposes, originality requires that the author show creativity and independent creation of the work.

Intangibles are not protected by copyright because they are unixed. If the work hasn’t been fixed in a tangible form (written down, tape recorded or burned to a CD-ROM), then it is not eligible for protection.

Other non-copyright forms of protection

Domain names are registered through the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) or through your web hosting service. There is an annual renewal fee.

Patents give exclusive rights to an inventor for an invention, discovery or process. To illustrate the difference, H.G. Wells could have obtained a patent on the time machine he invented and a copyright on his book The Time Machine.

Trademarks (or service marks) identify the source of goods or services to prevent public confusion. The trademark Coca-Cola® assures the public that the can contains Coke® not Pepsi® even though you can’t see inside. For information on patents and trademarks, visit the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office at https://www.uspto.gov

Trade Secrets are protected by being kept secret. For example, only Colonel Sanders knows the 11 herbs and spices. Copyrights, patents and trademarks are public records; trade secrets can never be revealed to the public.

Copyright Notice

Although optional, it is good practice to put the © symbol on your works with the year of creation and the copyright owner’s name. For example: © 2018 Mark J. Davis. Place the symbol where it would “give reasonable notice of the claim of copyright.”

Joint Authorship

Joint works are prepared by two or more persons with the intention that their contributions be merged into inseparable or interdependent parts of a unitary whole. Each portion must be independently copyrightable; that is, each part must be an original fixed expression. A writer and artist may agree to create a joint work, one supplying the text, the other the illustrations. The text is independently copyrightable, as is the art.

The author and illustrator are equal owners of the copyright in the joint work from the moment of its creation. A Joint Author Agreement should be signed especially if the ownership is not evenly split. It will also spell out the duties and interests of the heirs of the writer and artist. Please see the sample JOINT AUTHOR AGREEMENT.

Works-for-Hire

This is an exception to the general rule that the person who creates the work owns the copyright. If a work is made by an employee within the scope of their employment or if it was a specially commissioned contribution to a collective work, a part of a motion picture or audiovisual work, a translation, a supplementary work, a compilation, an instructional text, an atlas, test or test answer material, it may be a work-for-hire. The employer or hiring party is considered to be the author and thus the copyright owner. A work-for-hire agreement must be signed by both parties before the creation of the commissioned work. Please see the sample WORK FOR HIRE AGREEMENT.

How long does a copyright last?

That depends on how long you live. If the work was created after January 1, 1978, then the copyright lasts for the life of the author plus 70 years. For joint works (two or more authors or illustrators contributed), the copyright lasts for the life of the last surviving joint author plus 70 years. There is no renewal of copyright.

For works-for-hire (creations of an employee or contractor), copyright lasts in the name of the employer or hiring party for 95 years after publication or 120 years after creation, whichever is shorter. The same formula (shorter of 95 or 120) applies to anonymous and pseudonymous works, unless the author’s identity is revealed.

Why should I register if protection is automatic?

Registration is a legal formality intended to make a public record of the basic facts of a particular copyright. However, registration is not a requirement for protection. There are several excellent reasons to register your claim to copyright:

- Registrations are public records identifying the copyright claimant;
- Registration is mandatory before an infringement suit can be filed in court;
- For lawsuits, registration creates a presumption that the ownership claim is valid;
- If registration is made within three (3) months after publication or before an infringement, additional damages and attorney’s fees are available;
- Registration is necessary to obtain certain compulsory royalties; and
- Registration protects against the importation of infringing copies.

International Copyright

The United States has reciprocal copyright relations with 171 countries throughout the world. Under these treaties, each nation honors the other’s citizens’ copyrights. There is no need to file a duplicate registration in most foreign countries.

When do I file the registration?

A registration may be filed at any time within the life of the copyright, but in order to guarantee the strongest protection, file the registration within three months of the first publication of the work. The effective date of registration is the date that the Copyright Office first receives the application, payment and deposit copies in proper form, no matter how long it takes to process the claim and issue a registration certificate.

If registration is made within three months after the first publication of the work, the effective date of protection becomes retroactive to the date of publication. A registration filed prior to an infringement of the work gives the copyright owner the option for asking for an injunction and additional infringement penalties.

How long does it take?

The Copyright Office gets over 600,000 applications a year – give them some time. Even if you’ve filled out the form correctly, sent your deposit copies and proper fee, it might take nine months to receive your registration certificate. Don’t let that stop you from showing your work to prospective agents or publishers.

How do I file my registration?

Online registration through the electronic Copyright Office (eCO) is the preferred way to register. Advantages of online filing include lower filing fees, faster processing, credit card payment and direct upload of electronic files. Paper filing is also available.

Can't I use the "poor man's copyright" and just mail it to myself?

Obtaining copyright protection by mailing your work to yourself and not opening the envelope is an urban myth. Although it may have a postmark showing the date of mailing, that is not a substitute for registration. It will still be necessary to file for registration in the Copyright Office before a lawsuit. The postmarked envelope is not a public record or proof in court. It's a waste of time and money because it has no legal benefits for infringement lawsuits.

What is infringement?

Infringement is the unauthorized use of any of the six §106 rights granted exclusively to the copyright owner. In an infringement lawsuit, the owner must hold a valid copyright, prove that the infringer had access to the original work, that the defendant violated the owner's §106 rights and that the infringing work is substantially similar to the original.

Penalties for infringement include the actual damages suffered by the copyright owner plus the infringer's profits. In certain acts of willful infringement, they can go up to $150,000.

Public Domain

There is no such thing as perpetual copyright under U.S. law; all rights granted under §106 expire at the end of copyright. What the copyright owner once controlled is now free for all to use. At the end of copyright protection, anyone may alter, translate, copy and sell the work.

Works first published in the U.S. before January 1, 1923 are in public domain. U.S. works from that date to 12/31/1977 are probably still protected the 1909 Copyright Act. Cornell University has a chart explaining Public Domain in the U.S. http://copyright.cornell.edu/resources/publicdomain.cfm

Transfer of a copyright

Copyrights are assets that can be bought, sold, inherited and given away. It is a personal property right subject to state laws that govern divorce, community property, inheritance, contracts and transfer of personal property. Please see the sample ASSIGNMENT OF COPYRIGHT.

Copyright licensing and publication

Writers and illustrators earn income through issuing licenses to their §106 rights (copying, distribution, derivatives, serialization, translation, etc.). Only the copyright owner has the authority to publish a work by offering copies for sale to the public. Section 106 rights can be granted exclusively, non-exclusively, and for limited times, territories, formats and purposes. The essence of a publishing contract is the grant of rights held by the author and illustrator to a publisher.

Termination of licenses

For copyrights assigned after 1/1/1978, the law grants an opportunity to terminate the assignment after 35 years. Termination by an author or heirs and the form and time periods for notices of termination are technical and require a copyright attorney.

Sale of a copy is not a transfer of the copyright

The sale of a physical item that is protected by copyright is not the same as the transfer of the copyright itself. Buying a book is not equivalent to purchasing the §106 rights to copy, distribute, sell and make derivatives of that book.

Creative Commons

Creative Commons is a licensing framework within copyright, not a substitute for it. Instead of reserving all §106 rights, the copyright owner releases the work with some rights granted. The purpose of CC is to establish a standardized regime of permissions. This structure relies on a single set of definitions and rights that are applicable worldwide under each nation's copyright laws.

CC licenses contain combinations of these four concepts:

- Attribution of the work to the original author,
- No Derivatives of the original are permitted,
- Share Alike – Others may distribute derivatives based on the original, but only under a license identical to the author's original CC license.
- Non Commercial Use – Others may copy, distribute, display and perform the work and its derivatives, but for non-commercial purposes only. This prevents a third party from profiting from an author's original work.

A license cannot feature both the Share Alike and No Derivatives options because Share Alike only applies to derivatives. Creative Commons licenses are regularly revised and updated. For the latest information please visit: http://us.creativecommons.org

§107 Fair Use

Perhaps the most important limitation on copyright under U.S. law is that of Fair Use. Anyone can use a copyrighted work for the purposes of criticism, comment, news reporting, teaching, scholarship or research. However, it is not blanket permission for all purposes. Whether Fair Use shields a particular situation requires the analysis and application of these four factors:

- Purpose and character of the use
- Nature of the original work
- Amount taken from the original work
- Effect on the market for the original work

Contracts! A dirty word to some, intimidating to most. Can you negotiate them and if not, what do the whereins and wherefores and perpetuity clauses all mean to you?

You might not always be able to negotiate for what you want, but you need to have an overall understanding of the meaning of key clauses. Remember, you can always ask. The worst that happens is that the publisher says no. Always put your change requests in writing and send to your editor (who will forward it to the contracts department) or, if the cover letter that came with the contract contains a person’s name to respond to, send it to that person. If you are a first-time book author or illustrator, do not be intimidated and feel you should accept a contract without negotiating. While there are some parts of any contract that are not negotiable, other parts are indeed negotiable even by first-time authors or illustrators. We have made notations in bold which indicate possible negotiation points but obviously there are many other permutations too numerous to include here.

The below agreement is not an idealized contract; rather, it contains provisions similar to standard boilerplate provisions in the contract you will receive from your publisher. It is based on standard boilerplate from many publishing houses. Note that as the industry is changing with respect to electronic media, some of these clauses may change as well, and new ones will be added. As each publisher has its own standard boilerplate, the sections here may be in a different order and/or have different as the ones in the contract you receive, but they are all provisions that you will find somewhere in that contract.

We also include some clarifications, explanations, or suggestions for additions or negotiable changes have been noted. While the word Author has been used throughout, it stands for Illustrator also. Where provisions differ, however, that is indicated.

Finally, after the contract, there are a few general notes about important contract issues. You should also refer to the legal section on our website for additional information and forms.

(g) The exclusive right to license or otherwise exploit the Work throughout the world in respect to all forms of commercial tie-ins and adaptations, including (but not limited to) the exclusive right to use and license others to use the Work, or the title of the Work, in whole or in part for (i) trademarks or trade names for other products; (ii) toys or games, and (iii) otherwise reproducing the Work, its cover [Ask to add a statement here or elsewhere in the contract that says that you may use the cover of the book, interactivity, and all other elements for publicity purposes—on your website, on postcards, in trailers, etc.; sample language has been included in this agreement in paragraph 29], or associated artwork on any material or in any medium;

(h) The exclusive right to license or otherwise exploit motion picture, dramatic, television, radio, lyric, and all other forms of performance rights to the Work throughout the world [try to hold this back—publishers are not movie or TV producers]; and

(i)(i) The exclusive right to display the Work in any manner designed to be read and to license the display of the Work in any manner designed to be read, in whole or in part, by any means, method, device, or process now known or later developed [now known or hereafter developed is a dangerous phrase—delete if possible and if they insist on e-book rights get a reversion if they have not been exploited within 12 months], and whether the images of the Work are shown sequentially or nonsequentially [this means whether the text appears in the order in which it does in the book or whether it is taken out of order] (“Display Rights”), including without limitation online or offline electronic displays, mechanical visual recordings, or reproductions (together with accompanying sounds, if any, including a mechanical reading of the Work), microfilm, microfiche, data retrieval and storage systems, computer software systems, and all other forms of copying, recording, or transmitting of Author’s words and/or illustrations in any manner designed to be read, which are not either granted to the Publisher elsewhere in this Agreement or reserved to the Author;

(i)(ii) The exclusive right to produce, publish, sell, and license the Work in Interactive Multimedia Form. “Interactive Multimedia Form” shall mean any electronic magnetic, optical, digital, laser-based, or related form now known or later developed in which the Work, or any interactive adaptation, condensation, or abridgment thereof [this sentence is what makes (i)(ii) different from i)(i)—it gives the publisher the right to change the work as described; this is something you may wish to consider very carefully before agreeing to any such license] may be, in whole or in part, captured, stored, published, displayed, transmitted, broadcast, downloaded, or distributed, in a manner designed to be viewed and interacted with, sequentially or nonsequentially (together with accompanying sounds and images from the Work or other works, including a reading of the Work), including without limitation by magnetic tape, floppy disk, interactive CD, CD-ROM, laser disc, optical disc, integrated circuit card or chip, and any other human or machine-readable medium, and by transmission or broadcast, whether online, wireless, or by broadband, narrow band, coaxial cable, twisted pair, fiber optic, or satellite. [You should retain any enhanced rights, images, texts, etc., that may be added to create interactivity or other changes to the material necessary to the new media.]

[Note that many publishers are now separating out the language and defining physical versions in one area and electronic/digital in another.]

DELIVERY OF MANUSCRIPT AND CORRECTIONS

[For the Author]

2. (a) The Author shall deliver to the Publisher on or before [a specified date] one (1) digital copy that complies with Publishers production requirements and upon request, one hard copy. [Requirements should be included with contract]

[For the illustrator]

2. (a) The Illustrator shall deliver to the Publisher on or before [a specified date] complete sketches for the Work, including sketches for jacket art, and shall deliver to the Publisher on or before [a specified date] the complete, final artwork from the approved sketches of the Work. [Specify number requested and any other details required by Publisher.]
(b) If the Author fails to deliver the manuscript by that date, the Publisher shall have the right to terminate this Agreement upon written notice to the Author, in which event the Author shall promptly repay to the Publisher any and all sums paid to the Author. Any extension of the delivery date must be agreed to in writing by the Publisher. [It would be advisable to negotiate some language similar to this to allow you to revise the manuscript or artwork if necessary before the agreement can be terminated: “Should the manuscript as submitted not be acceptable to the Publisher for editorial reasons, the Publisher will provide the Author the opportunity to make the Work acceptable before exercising its option to terminate the Agreement.” It is advisable to negotiate several periods for revisions before the manuscript or artwork is considered unacceptable. Try to keep some or all of the paid advance, though this ability will depend enormously on the negotiating power of the Author. Another option is to repay if it is sold to another publisher—make it a condition of the new deal.]

(c) If the Publisher should terminate this Agreement due to nondelivery of the manuscript, the Author shall not publish or permit the publication of the Work or any other work of a substantially similar nature or subject matter by any other publisher without first offering the manuscript for any such work to the Publisher upon the terms set forth in this Agreement. [This provision is totally unacceptable. If the rights are terminated—and of course the Publisher must notify the Author of this—then they should revert immediately back to the Author upon repayment of the portion of the Advance paid prior to the notice.]

(d) If the Publisher exercises its option to terminate this Agreement, the Author shall use his best efforts to sell the Work elsewhere and shall repay any and all sums paid to him under this Agreement out of the first payments due him when and if another publisher accepts the Work for publication. (Such payments from another publisher, up to the total amount of any and all sums paid to the Author under this Agreement, being First Proceeds. [This means if the Author/Illustrator sells the book to a third party, money payable by that third party first goes to repay the initial publisher if the Author has not yet repaid the advance. Another point is to limit this repayment to proceeds from the sale of the book only—not from subsidiary rights, such as movies, etc.]

(e) Simultaneously with the delivery of the manuscript, the Author shall deliver to the Publisher, at the Author’s sole cost and expense, all photographs, drawings, captions, maps, charts, tables, appendixes, notes, bibliography, and other matters required by this Agreement. If the Author fails to do so, the Publisher shall have the option to supply such materials itself, if necessary employing outside editorial and artistic assistance, and to charge the cost thereof to the Author against the Work. [The latter sentence should be deleted and the Publisher should pay all costs.]

(h) If copyrighted material is included in the Work (other than that for which the Author is the lawful proprietor), the Author, at his sole expense, shall secure from the copyright proprietor and deliver to the Publisher written permission, in a form satisfactory to the Publisher, to reproduce such materials in the Work, and in all editions, adaptations, and media and in the territory and during the entire term permitted in this Agreement. [This permission form should be provided by the Publisher up front.]

(i) The Author shall read, revise, correct, and return to the Publisher all proofs of the Work submitted to him by the Publisher within 60 days of receipt of a written statement from Publisher detailing the changes. The Author shall pay for all alterations in the proof made at the Author’s request exclusive of the cost of correcting typesetter errors or making publisher alterations, to the extent that such alterations exceed ten percent (10%) of the cost of composition. The Author shall pay for all alterations (exclusive of the cost of correcting typesetter errors or making Publisher alterations) that he requests after page proofs have been made or typesetting of the Work has been corrected in conformity with the Author’s corrected galleys. [If Publisher fails to comment within 10 days, it is deemed accepted—this is important because portions of the advance are tied to acceptance.]

3. (a) The Publisher will, within eighteen (18) months after acceptance of the Work, publish or cause publication of the Work in such editions, imprints, style, and manner and at such prices as it deems suitable. The Publisher shall be authorized to exercise the usual editorial privileges in the course of preparing the Work for composition and to make the manuscript conform to its standard style of punctuation, spelling, capitalization, and usage. [This applies to text-only manuscripts—which basically means novels. The publication time for picture books and nonfiction that requires author-supplied photographs or other material will depend on when the artwork, photographs, or other material is received, in which case the language will read: “The publisher shall, except for circumstances beyond its control, publish the work no more than eighteen (18) months after receipt of such artwork, photographs, or other material.”]

(b) The failure of the Publisher to publish or cause publication of the Work within the time period set forth above shall not be deemed to be a violation of this Agreement if such failure to publish is caused by restrictions of governmental agencies, labor disputes, inability to have the book manufactured or to obtain the materials necessary for its manufacture, or by any delay occasioned by the assertion of any claim, or warranties contained in paragraph 13, or for any other cause beyond the control of the Publisher. In the event of a delay resulting from any cause referred to in this paragraph, the publication date may, at the Publisher’s option, be postponed accordingly, provided, however, that if the delay is occasioned by the assertion of any claim, action, or proceeding covered, and such claim, action, or proceeding is not resolved by settlement or final judgment within six (6) months, the Publisher shall have the option to terminate this Agreement and the Author shall thereupon repay any advance paid to him.

(c) If the Publisher fails to publish the Work within the agreed time period, the Author may, at his option, by written notice to the Publisher demand that the Publisher, publish the Work. In the event the Publisher has not published within six (6) months of such notice, the Author may terminate this Agreement. If, however, the Publisher’s failure to publish is the result of delays in delivery and acceptance of the text and/or artwork for the Work, the Publisher’s time to publish shall be extended accordingly. In such event the only damages recoverable by the Author shall be limited to the total advance payable under this Agreement.

(d) Nothing herein shall require the Publisher to publish or license each and every edition permitted to be published or licensed hereunder. Furthermore, the Publisher shall not be required to continue publication of the Work if, in its opinion, it violates the right of privacy or any property or personal right of any person, or contains any libelous, scandalous, or other unlawful matter, or presents a substantial risk of liability. or injury to third persons or of governmental action against the Work. If in the good faith opinion of Publisher’s legal counsel, the Publisher is unable to publish the Work for the reasons set forth in this paragraph, the Publisher shall have the right to terminate this Agreement, and the Author shall thereupon repay any advance paid to him.

(e) The Publisher may elect to have the Work reviewed by its counsel prior to publication, in which event the Author shall cooperate in the vetting process and shall make such changes in the Work as are requested by the Publisher's counsel. Such vetting and review made as a result of the vetting shall not diminish the Author's representations, warranties, and indemnities under paragraph 13 of this Agreement.

ADVANCES AND ROYALTIES

4. The Publisher shall pay to the Author as an advance against all royalties and other sums accruing to the Author under this Agreement, the sum of [total amount of the advance to be agreed upon by Author and Publisher] to be paid as follows:

One-half upon execution of this Agreement; and One-half upon the Publisher’s receipt and acceptance of the final complete manuscript. [This is the usual way that the advance is paid. It may, however, be paid in full on signing (when the final manuscript has already been accepted), or it may be split into three payments (this is the usual schedule for illustrators, who will receive one-third on signing, one-third on delivery of sketches, and one-third on final acceptance of artwork). Some publishing houses have instituted a three-tiered schedule for payment of the advance—1/3 on signing, 1/3 on delivery of acceptable manuscript, and 1/3 on publication. Usually, this is applied to large advances; however, it may be found in other contracts as well. The third tier—payment on publication—is the most objectionable. Though you may not be able to eliminate the third tier, you may be able to negotiate the payout schedule. Try to get 75% or more of the advance paid on signing and delivery with only 25% or less to be paid on publication.]

[If you are an established author or illustrator and/or your publisher is enthusiastic about the book, you may be able to negotiate an additional advance should the book win or be named an honor book for either the Caldecott or Newbery Awards with such payment shall be made within thirty (30) days of the announcement of the award.]

Note: Royalties are only paid after the publisher recoups the advance. Once they are payable, however, you want them based on list or selling price rather than on net sales. Net is the amount the publisher actually receives on all sales; it is usually about half the retail price.

Hardcover

5. The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold of any trade hardcover edition of the Work published by the Publisher, less credited returns and less a reasonable reserve for estimated returns:

(a) Except as otherwise provided below, the following percentages of the Publisher’s suggested retail price of each copy sold in the United States through normal channels:

10% on the first 20,000 copies of the Work sold [where there are two people involved—author and illustrator or coauthors—the 10% will be split between them. Most often it is an equal split, but there are a number of circumstances in which it may be unequal; e.g., when an unknown author or illustrator is paired with a well-known illustrator or author, or when illustrations make up less than half the book]; and 12.5% on all copies of the Work sold thereafter [this is a common escalation—if the publisher will agree to an escalation at all].

(b) Where the discount to jobbers or to wholesale distributors or booksellers on copies of any edition published by the Publisher is fifty-two percent (52%) or more, the Publisher shall pay to the Author one-half the prevailing royalty rate under paragraph 5(a);

[Where two people are involved, royalties marked with an asterisk below will be split between them in accordance with the agreement they have reached with the publisher.]

*(c) A royalty of ten percent (10%) of the amount in excess of the Publisher's manufacturing cost received by the Publisher on sales of overstock and damaged copies that the Publisher deems expedient to sell at a discount of sixty percent (60%) or more. No sale of overstock shall take place within the first year after publication of the Work in book form, except upon the written consent of Author (or the Author's agent); such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld;

*(d) A royalty of ten percent (10%) of the amount received by the Publisher for copies, bound or in sheets, sold for export, for copies, bound or in sheets, sold in bulk to book clubs, or for copies sold at a special discount of sixty percent (60%) or more of the Publisher’s suggested retail price;

*(e) A royalty of twelve and one-half percent (12.5%) of the amount received by the Publisher on all sales in Canada on copies of any edition published by the Publisher;

*(f) A royalty of five percent (5%) of the actual selling price on copies sold directly to commercial purchasers as a premium or to the consumer through the medium of mail-order coupon advertising, direct by-mail circularization or solicitation by radio or television;

*(g) A royalty of ten percent (10%) of the Publisher’s suggested retail price or a royalty equal to the initial royalty rate, whichever is lower, on all copies sold from a reprinting of two thousand five hundred (2,500) copies or less made within the first two years after publication;

(h) A royalty of one-half the prevailing royalty rate on all copies sold from a reprinting of two thousand five hundred (2,500) copies or less made two (2) years or more after first publication, provided that sales in the six (6)-month period immediately preceding such reprinting do not exceed five hundred (500) copies, it is understood that there shall be no more than one (1) printing per calendar year;

*(i) A royalty of five percent (5%) of the Publisher's suggested retail price of each copy sold within the United States of any hardcover reprint edition issued by the Publisher at a suggested retail price of not more than two-thirds (2/3) the original suggested retail price.

*(j) A pro-rata share of five percent (5%) of the suggested retail price of any omnibus edition in which the Work appears.
Trade Paperback

6. The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold of any trade paperback edition of the Work published by the Publisher, less credited returns and less a reasonable reserve for estimated returns:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph 6, the following percentages of the Publisher’s suggested retail price of each copy sold in the United States through normal channels:

6% on all copies of the Work sold.

(b) A royalty of two-thirds (2/3) of the above royalty rate based upon the amount received by the Publisher, on all copies sold for export, or outside the United States:

*(c) A royalty of five percent (5%) of the amount received by the Publisher on sales of overstock and damaged copies, and on all copies sold to a governmental agency, or through the medium of mail order;

*(d) A royalty of five percent (5%) of the amount received by the Publisher on special sales, to commercial purchasers as a premium, in bulk to book clubs, and outside normal wholesale and retail channels8 and for each copy sold at a discount of fifty percent (50%) or more from the Publisher’s suggested retail price of the trade paperback edition of the Work.

Mass Market Paperback

7. The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold of any mass-market paperback edition of the Work published by the Publisher, less credited returns and less a reasonable reserve for estimated returns:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph the following percentages of the Publisher’s suggested retail price of each copy sold in the United States through normal channels:

6% on all copies of the Work sold. [This is fairly standard but can vary.]

*(b) A royalty of three percent (3%) of the Publisher’s suggested retail price on all copies sold for export, or outside the United States;

*(c) A royalty of five percent (5%) of the amount received by the Publisher on sales of overstock and damaged copies, and on all copies sold to a government agency, to a book club, or through the medium of mail order;

*(d) A royalty of five percent (5%) of special sales, to commercial purchasers as a premium, in bulk outside normal (wholesale and retail) channels [this refers to outlets such as Walmart, Costco, and other companies whose primary business is not selling books], and for each copy sold at a discount of fifty-five percent (55%) or more from the Publisher’s suggested retail price of the mass-market edition of the Work.

Royalties for Other Editions

8. *(a) The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold by the Publisher of any audio cassette (or other sound recording) of the Work, less credited returns and a reasonable reserve for estimated returns:

6% on all copies of the Work sold. [You may want to try to make this the suggested retail price rather than net received.]

(b) The Publisher shall pay to the Author or credit the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold by the Publisher of any versions of the Work resulting from Publisher’s exercise of Display Rights (as defined in paragraph 1(j)), less any credited returns and a reasonable reserve for estimated returns, a royalty of eight percent (8%) of the net amount received by the Publisher.

Irrespective of price, in the event the Publisher receives less than forty percent (40%) of the suggested retail price for such edition, the royalty rate shall be reduced by one-half the difference between forty percent (40%) and the amount received by the Publisher for such edition, but in no event shall the royalty exceed one-half the amount received by the Publisher.

*(c) The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold by the Publisher of any board book (or other similar edition) of the Work, less credited returns and less a reasonable reserve for estimated returns, a royalty of three percent (3%) of the retail amount received by the Publisher.

Royalties from Licensing

9. The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the specified percentage of the net proceeds received by the Publisher from the licensing of the following rights:

- Royalties due to Author for Publisher’s Physical and Digital Versions
- On regular sales and sales made directly to consumers from Publisher’s e-commerce website the following percentages of Suggested Retail Price [this is critical—many publishers will try to get royalties based upon amounts received (net), which you want to avoid]:
  - Hardcover 5% to 25,000 copies, 6.25% thereafter
  - Paperback 3%
  - Other (big book, board book, etc.) 3%
  - Mass market on net paperback 50%
  - Trade paperback 50%
  - Hardcover reprint 50%
  - Book club 50%
  - Syndication 50%
  - First periodical rights (prior to first book publication) 70%
  - Second periodical rights (after first book publication): serialization, digest, abridgment, condensation, excerpt 50%

[The above stipulation is to keep the book in print. This will be discussed more in detail below.]
Anthology and other selection reprint, in whole or in part: in complete, condensed, adapted or abridged versions 50%
Premium, direct mail, coupon advertising 50%
Display rights 50%
Mechanical audiovisual rights 50%
Mechanical audio recordings 50%
*Interactive multimedia form 50%
Publication in the English language outside of the United States 70%
Publication in other languages 70%
*Motion picture, television, radio, lyric and dramatic rights 70%
*Commercial adaptations and tie-ins 50%

On sales of digital version, 12.5% of amounts received [this is quickly changing]

(c) The Publisher shall pay to the Author, or credit to the Author’s account, the following royalties on copies sold by the Publisher of any board book (or other similar edition) of the Work, less credited returns and less a reasonable reserve for estimated returns [try to cap the returns to a very low percentage] a royalty of three percent (3%) of the retail amount received by the Publisher.

[The following section will only appear in a contract if there is a separate contract with another party—such as an author or an illustrator.]

10. All sums of money due the Author shall be paid at the rate of [a percentage previously negotiated] of the royalties stipulated in the above paragraphs as printed, provided said sums are related to the use of both text and artwork. If said sums relate only to the use of text, no payments shall be due the Illustrator. If said receipts relate only to the use of artwork, no payments shall be due the Author.

No Royalties

11. No royalty, fee, or other charge shall be payable to the Author for the following, applicable to all editions of the Work published or caused to be published pursuant to this Agreement:

(a) Sales made at or below Manufacturing Cost, copies destroyed, copies furnished gratis to the Author, editorial review copies, or copies otherwise used to promote the sale of the Work;

(b) Licensing publication of the Work without fee, in Braille (or similar tactile symbols), or by mechanical audio recordings or visual recordings, solely for the blind and other physically handicapped persons; and publishing or permitting others to publish or broadcast or transmit by radio, television, or online selections from the Work, for publicity and promotion purposes only.

Statements and Payments

12. (a) The Publisher shall render semiannual statements of account no later than May 1 for the period ending December 31 and November 1 for the period ending June 30, except that the first statement shall not be rendered until at least six (6) months after publication date. Such statements shall be submitted to the Author, together with payment for all amounts due for each period so long as any payments are due.

All payments made by the Publisher to or for the account of the Author pursuant to this Agreement shall be chargeable against and recoverable by the Publisher from any and all moneys accruing to the Author under this Agreement with the Publisher [money that is recoverable from this agreement should be recoverable ONLY from this agreement and not from another contract with this publisher; it is highly recommended that this change be made to the contract], and all sums owing by the Author to the Publisher under this Agreement may be deducted from payments accruing to the Author under this Agreement with the Publisher. State, federal, and foreign taxes on the Author’s earnings, when required by law to be withheld and paid by the Publisher, shall be proper charges against the Author’s earnings hereunder [this is when there is a tax or other lien against the earnings of the author]. When the balance to the credit of the Author at the end of any statement period shall be less than fifty dollars ($50) [this amount varies from publisher to publisher—the standard range is $10 to $50], no statement shall be rendered [however, you can request, in writing, to have a statement rendered], and the amount due shall be carried forward. The Author or his duly authorized representative shall have the right, upon written request, to examine the Publisher’s records that relate to the Work; such examination shall be at the cost of the Author unless errors of accounting amounting to five percent (5%) or more of the total sum paid to the Author during the period covered by such request shall be found to his disadvantage, in which case the cost shall be borne by the Publisher.

Author’s Representations, Warranties, and Indemnities

13. The Author hereby represents and warrants to the Publisher, any seller or distributor of the Work, and to the Publisher’s successors, licensees, and assigns, and any officers, agents, and employees of the foregoing: (i) that he is the sole Author of the Work; (ii) that he is the sole and exclusive owner of all rights granted to the Publisher in this Agreement and has not assigned, pledged, or otherwise encumbered the same; (iii) that the Work is original, has not been published in book form, and is not in the public domain; (iv) that he has full power to enter into this Agreement and to make the grants herein contained; (v) that the Work does not, in whole or in part, infringe any copyright or violate any right of privacy or other personal or property right whatsoever.

[This section is for your protection. Publishers take out insurance which covers most situations. The following specifies the way in which the situations will be dealt with.]

In the event of the assertion of any claim, action, or proceeding inconsistent with any of the foregoing representations and warranties, (a) the Publisher shall have the right to defend the same through counsel of its own choosing, and (b) the Author shall fully cooperate in the Publisher’s defense and shall indemnify and hold harmless the Publisher, any seller or distributor of the Work, and the Publisher’s successors, licensees, and assigns, and any officers, agents, and employees of the foregoing, from and against any and all liability, damage, loss, expense (including attorneys’ fees to the extent provided below), and settlement costs, resulting from any such claim, action or proceeding, provided that no settlement covered by this indemnity shall be effected by the Publisher without the prior written consent of the Author, which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld.

If such claim, action, or proceeding is successfully defended, or settled as provided above, the Author and the Publisher will share the Publisher’s attorneys’ fees equally; if such claim, action, or proceeding results in a final judgment or decree against the Publisher, the Author will be responsible for the entire amount of such fees. If the Author desires to settle such claim, action, or proceeding and the Publisher desires to continue the defense thereof, the Author’s liability under the foregoing indemnity shall be limited to the bona fide settlement amount (evidenced in writing) in respect to such claim, action, or proceeding against the Publisher plus one-half the Publisher’s reasonable outside attorneys’ fees up to the time that the claimant and the Author agreed upon the amount. If any such claim, action, or proceeding is threatened or instituted, the Publisher shall promptly notify the Author and, in the Publisher’s sole discretion, may withhold payments due the Author under this or any other previously executed agreement between the Publisher and the Author [this is what is called a cross default clause—it is critical that this be deleted, as it means the Publisher can withhold payments under any agreements they may have with you, not just the one which is subject to the litigations] subject to the Author’s right to draw on such sums to defray expenses of the Publisher in defending such claim, action, or proceeding (to the extent covered by this indemnity) and to satisfy and discharge any judgment or decree rendered. In the event that a judgment or decree shall be entered in any court upon any such claim, action, or proceeding and the Author shall desire to appeal, the Author shall indemnify and hold harmless the Publisher, any seller or distributor of the Work, and the Publisher’s successors, licensees, and assigns, and any officers, agents and employees of the foregoing, from and against any and all liability, damage, loss, and expense (including all reasonable, outside attorneys’ fees) of such appeal and shall furnish and file all bonds necessary to perfect said appeal and to stay execution of any such judgment or decree. If a final adverse judgment or decree is rendered in such action or proceeding and is not promptly paid, bonded, or stayed by the Author, or if costs and expenses (including reasonable, outside attorneys’ fees) covered by the foregoing indemnity are not promptly paid by the Author, the Publisher may apply the payments so withheld to the satisfaction and discharge of such judgment or decree and to the payment of such costs and expenses. Irrespective of the foregoing, the Publisher shall have the right at any time on its own behalf and expense to settle any such claim, action, or proceeding without the Author’s consent. [It is important that they come to the author for consent, as any settlement can be taken out of the royalties due to the author.] The representations, warranties, and indemnities contained herein are continuing representations, warranties, and indemnities, and will remain in effect even upon expiration of this agreement.

Copyright

14. (a) The Publisher shall print in each edition of the work published by it a proper United States copyright notice in the name of [name of claimant] sufficient to secure United States copyright and Universal Copyright Convention protection in the Work. The Author hereby appoints the Publisher as his attorney-in-fact, and in such capacity the Publisher shall duly register a claim for United States copyright in the Work in such person’s name within ninety (90) days of publication and for any renewals [provided the Publisher still has the rights], extensions, or continuations thereof if necessary, and shall deposit the required number of copies of the Work with the Library of Congress. The Publisher shall use its best efforts to see that every license granted by it to publish, reproduce, or otherwise use he Work, in whole or in part, contain a specific requirement that the licensee will print a proper copyright notice in each edition of the Work published by such licensee. The Publisher’s failure to carry out the obligations in this subparagraph shall not be deemed a breach of this Agreement unless the Publisher shall not use its best efforts to cure such failure after notice from the Author.

(b) The Author, his heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns shall render such cooperation and assistance as the Publisher may reasonably request to protect the rights granted hereunder, including (but not limited to) delivering to Publisher appropriate transfers of copyright and other documents, in legal recordable form, in respect to all or any portion of the Work or any edition thereof. In addition, the Author shall promptly notify the Publisher of any arrangement he makes for the publication of the Work, in whole or in part, by any person other than the Publisher, as to any rights reserved to the Author hereunder.

(c) If the Work contains a substantial portion of material taken from documents prepared and published by the United States Government and therefore not subject to copyright, the Author shall notify the Publisher in writing of the existence and location of all such material in the Work.

Copyright Infringement

15. In the event that the copyright of the Work shall be infringed, and if no mutually satisfactory arrangement shall be arrived at for joint action in regard thereto, either the Author or the Publisher, jointly or separately, shall have the right to bring an action to enjoin such infringement and to recover damages. If they shall proceed jointly, the expenses and recoveries, if any, shall be shared equally; if they cannot agree to proceed jointly, any party going forward with such action shall bear his or its own expenses, and any recoveries obtained therein shall belong to such party. If the party bringing action does not hold the record title of copyright, the other party will transfer and permit the recordation of such copyright ownership as will permit the former to bring the action in his or its own name. [In order to bring a copyright infringement case to court, the suing party has to be the owner of the copyright. This would be an unusual situation; in most cases such a case would be brought jointly by the author and the publisher.]

Author’s Property

16. The Publisher shall not be responsible for loss or damage to any property of the Author. In the absence of a written request from the Author made prior to publication, the Publisher, after publication of the Work, may dispose of the original manuscript and proofs.
Illustrator’s Property

16. The original artwork is the property of the Illustrator and is to be returned to the Illustrator within six (6) months following publication of the Work. In the event the Author’s original artwork, while in the Publisher’s possession and control and due to the Publisher’s own negligence is lost or damaged so as to render such artwork unsaleable, it is agreed that the Publisher shall reimburse the Author for the value of the lost or damaged artwork, and that such artwork is valued at $500 per full-color spread, jacket, or full individual page and $100 per piece of spot art (black/white or color) or black/white full page. It is agreed that the Publisher shall not be responsible for normal wear and tear. [If you are an illustrator, you may have to ask to have this language inserted. Not all publishers include it automatically in illustrators’ agreements. If the Illustrator feels that these figures don’t represent the actual value of the artwork, the Illustrator must provide documentation that it is worth more.]

Author's Copies

17. The Author shall be entitled to receive on publication ten (10) free copies of the Work published by the Publisher, and shall have the right to purchase further copies for personal use and not for resale at a discount of forty percent (40%) from the Publisher’s suggested retail price. [40% is fairly standard throughout the industry. This discount is not a negotiable item. While permissions are not covered by this statement, it is possible and advisable to request a copy of any permission granted by the Publisher. It is also advisable to request that you receive a copy of any print edition in which your work appears. The reason for this being in the contract is so that you have a way to track use of your work or an excerpt and any payments for it.]

Contracts with Others

18. The Publisher shall notify the Author of the terms of any contract or agreement entered into by the Publisher for any grant or license permitted under this Agreement where the Author’s share of the proceeds or royalty is or is likely to amount to five hundred dollars ($500) or more and, upon the Author’s request [you should add language requiring the Publisher to do this so that the burden is not on you to ask for it], shall furnish the Author with a copy of each such contract or agreement.

Use of Author’s Name and Likeness

19. The Publisher, in its sole discretion, may use and authorize the use of the Author’s [approved] name, likeness, photograph, and biographical data in [make sure the Publisher is required to use only pictures, bios, etc., that you approve in advance] connection with advertising, publicizing, licensing, and promoting the Work, and any commercial adaptation thereof.

No Competing Work

20. The Author agrees that during the term of this Agreement he will not, without the written permission of the Publisher, publish or authorize to be published any work substantially similar to the Work or which is reasonably likely to injure its sale of the merchandising or the other rights granted herein. [This is a very burdensome and difficult clause. If you cannot get it stricken, try to add language that more clearly defines “substantially similar.” While this language is fairly standard throughout the industry, it is really too broad for the author’s protection. We suggest that the Author consider revising the language in this section to include limitations—for instance, to limit it to “a work featuring the same character”—and to ensure that if the Publisher rejects a work containing that same character that the author is then free to sell that work elsewhere without penalty.]

TERMINATION

Out-of-Print Provisions

[Note that these provisions are critical, especially with digital distribution. Suggested language for this will appear below. There is also a short article on this in the appendix.]

21. If the Work shall be out-of-print and if, after written request from the Author to put the Work back into print, the Publisher shall fail to place the Work in print, or license publication of a reprint edition by another publisher as permitted herein within a period of six (6) months [try to get this reduced to 2–3 months maximum] after the date of such notice (subject, however, to delay from causes beyond the control of the Publisher), this Agreement shall thereupon terminate subject to the terms in paragraph 24. The Work shall not be deemed to be out-of-print so long as it is under contract for publication or on sale in any edition in the United States, whether under the imprint of the Publisher or a licensee. [This is a clause you want modified to reflect either a certain number must be sold—300 is reasonable—or you must have received a certain amount of revenue.]

The existence of an individual print on demand edition or an electronic edition shall not constitute the Work being in print unless there are total sales of 300 copies or more per year. [Make sure you receive documentation of this. Some publishers are beginning to allow a revenue amount. It may be possible to negotiate to raise the number of copies.]

Termination by Publisher

22. If the Publisher shall determine that there is not sufficient sale of the work to enable the Publisher to continue the Work’s publication and sale, the Publisher may give written notice of the termination of this Agreement to the Author, with such effect as provided in paragraph 24 below. [It is highly unlikely that the Publisher will, in fact, notify the Author that the book is going out-of-print. The Author should keep himself/herself aware of the sales of the book, recognizing that sales of fewer than 500 copies a year will not normally be enough to keep a book in print. With respect to digital publishing, again, make sure there is a certain revenue amount, which if achieved, does not allow the Publisher to terminate.]

Bankruptcy and Liquidation

23. If the Publisher is adjudicated a bankrupt or makes a general assignment for the benefit of creditors or liquidates its business, this Agreement, to the extent permitted by law, shall terminate. [The trustee in bankruptcy makes all decisions regarding disposition of the work,
Rights on Termination

24. Upon termination of this Agreement for any cause, all rights granted to the Publisher shall revert to the Author, subject to the Publisher’s continued participation, to the extent provided, in any licenses previously granted by the Publisher. [You should ask to have language added that states that if there are any such previously granted licenses, the Publisher may not renew them upon their expiration and the rights will revert to you.]

The Publisher may dispose of any or all of the copies of the Work remaining on hand as it deems best, subject to the payment of royalties as provided. However, for a period of thirty (30) days after termination the Author shall have the right to purchase any remaining stock at the estimated remainder price plus shipping and handling charges. [This should be at cost or below.]

Revision

25. If the Publisher, in its sole discretion, determines that a revision of the Work is desirable, the Author shall have thirty (30) days after receipt of a request from the Publisher to notify the Publisher that he will make the revision himself within [a period to be mutually agreed].

If the Author fails to deliver such notice, or having delivered such notice he shall fail to deliver a revision satisfactory to the Publisher in style, content, length, and form within that period, the Publisher shall have the right, with the agreement of the Author, to make the revision, charging any outside editorial fee or other fee or royalty to the Author against the Work. It is further agreed that for the purposes of royalty computation, the revised edition shall be considered a new work, and the same scale of royalties shall apply to it as applied to the original edition hereunder. [If a royalty escalation has gone into effect, this will eliminate the escalation and the royalty rate will go back to the original rate as set forth in the contract.]

Option on Next Work

[This provision is in some but not all contracts. It is best to delete it completely. If the Publisher refuses, some suggested modifications appear below.]

26. The Author hereby grants to the Publisher the exclusive right and option to publish his next book-length work, subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth. The Author shall submit the completed manuscript of such work to the Publisher before offering or submitting it to any other party. The Publisher shall have a period of ninety (90) days after submission within which to notify the Author whether it desires to publish the work. If within such period the Publisher notifies the Author of its desire to publish such work, the parties shall negotiate in good faith with respect to the terms of an agreement to publish such work. For ninety (90) days the Author shall not submit or offer such work to any other party or negotiate with any other party with respect to such work. After ninety (90) days, or if the Author and the Publisher are unable to reach an agreement, the Author may offer such work to other parties, provided, however, that he shall not enter into an agreement for the publication of such work with any other publisher upon terms equal to or less favorable than those offered by the Publisher. [If you can’t delete this, make the option as specific as possible—, for example, a book featuring the same characters, next book in a series, or a book in the same genre as the contracted work. Many publishers want to have the right to wait until publication of the contracted work before responding to the submission of the next work. This is blatantly unfair, since publication may take three years or more. In the event the Author and the Publisher cannot come to an agreement on this option work, the Publisher may want to continue the option. This is unacceptable.]

Agency Clause

27. [If you have an agent, there will be an agency clause, inserted by your agent, to authorize the collection and receipt by the agent of all sums of money payable to you under the terms of this agreement. This clause will also empower your agent to act on your behalf in all matters in any way arising out of this agreement. If you and your agent terminate your relationship, you both must notify the publisher in writing. The publisher may consider the agent’s notification valid without hearing from the author, but the reverse will never be true.]

Notices

28. Any notices required or permitted to be given shall be in writing and shall be delivered personally or sent by registered or certified mail, postage prepaid, return receipt requested, to the Publisher or the Author (or his agent) at the respective addresses given above, or at such other addresses as the parties may from time to time designate by written notice given in the manner provided herein.

Reservation of Rights to Author

29. All rights in the Work not granted to the Publisher are reserved to the Author and may be exercised or disposed of by him at any time during the term of this Agreement. [It is recommended that you ask for the following paragraph to be included in your contract, as it is not likely that most contracts will have this provision:]

“The Publisher acknowledges that the Author has the right to use the cover, any pictures, and all text of the Work for the sole purpose of promotion of the Author on the Author’s own website and in any publicity material the Author may distribute for any self-promotional purposes, including but not limited to flyers, postcards, trailers, social networking, and bookmarks. Additionally the Author may use of the cover of the Work or illustrations or text for use in any presentation the Author may make about his work. The Author agrees to acknowledge the Publisher as the publisher of the Work and to provide ordering information for the Work should the Publisher so desire.”]

Assignment of Publication Under Affiliated Imprint

30. This Agreement shall be binding upon and shall inure to the benefit of the parties and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in this Agreement, the Publisher may assign this Agreement to any parent, subsidiary, or affiliated company that expressly assumes all the obligations of the Publisher or that acquires all or a substantial portion of the business of the Publisher. [In the event that the Publisher merges with or is purchased by another company, this allows the Publisher to continue publishing titles it has accepted—provided that it continues publishing the genre of the book licensed hereunder. If that is not the case, you should have the option to terminate and get the rights back.] Any other assignment, whether voluntary or by operation of law, shall be null and void unless the assigning party has obtained the written approval of the other party.

Entire Agreement

31. This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the parties and supersedes all prior agreements, understandings, and proposals (whether written or oral) in respect to the matters specified. No waiver or modification of any of these provisions shall be valid unless done in writing and signed by or on behalf of the party granting such waiver or modification. No waiver of any breach or default shall be deemed a waiver of any subsequent breach or default or in any way affect any of the other terms or conditions contained in this Agreement. [This means only points in writing are valid].

Severability

32. If any provision of this Agreement is judicially declared to be invalid, unenforceable, or void by a court, such decision shall not have the effect of invalidating or voiding the remainder of this Agreement, and the part or parts of this Agreement held to be invalid, unenforceable, or void shall be deemed to have been deleted from this Agreement, and the remainder of this Agreement shall have the same force and effect as if such part or parts had never been included.

Interpretation, Venue, and Service of Process

33. This Agreement shall be interpreted and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of [state or country in which the publisher is located], applicable to contracts made and to be entirely performed therein. Any suit, action, claim, or proceeding arising out of or in any way relating to this Agreement or its breach may be brought only in a court of record in the State of [the state or country in which the publisher is located], and the parties hereby consent to jurisdiction of the said courts and to service of process upon them either personally or by certified or registered mail, postage prepaid, return receipt requested. Service of process made by certified or registered mail as herein provided shall be deemed complete three (3) days after the mailing thereof.

Definition of “Author”; Joint Authors

34. The word “Author” shall include male, female, or a firm or corporation, and the plural. In the case of more than one author, their rights and duties shall be joint and several, and each author is hereby designated as agent for the other for purposes of service of process in any action or proceeding brought by the Publisher against either or both authors arising out of or in any way relating to this Agreement or its breach. In the event this Agreement is with more than one author and a dispute arises between the authors that threatens to involve the Publisher in litigation, the Publisher shall have the right to cancel this Agreement if such dispute is not settled or finally determined by court order within ninety (90) days, and, in that event, any advances paid to or for the account of the authors shall be repaid to the Publisher.

Definition of terms

35. As used in this Agreement:

(a) “Suggested retail price” will mean the price on the jacket or cover of the applicable edition of the Work or, in the absence of a cover price, the retail list price for the edition suggested by the Publisher in its catalogs, order forms, or promotional material;

b) “Amount received” will mean amounts actually received by the Publisher, after allowances and return credits, and excluding postage and shipping costs or other similar charges, and sales, excise, or similar taxes, if any; and

c) “Manufacturing cost” will mean the per-unit cost of plant, paper, printing, and binding of the applicable edition, but any copy sold at a discount of eighty-five percent (85%) or more from the suggested retail price shall be deemed sold below manufacturing cost.

Effect of Headings

36. Descriptive words and general statements used in the paragraph headings of this Agreement to summarize the contents of the paragraphs are not to be considered a legal part of this Agreement.
JOINT AUTHOR AGREEMENT

The parties listed below desire to collaborate in the creation of a literary work entitled ____________________.

The parties undertake to create the literary work jointly. It is their intention that their individual contributions merge into inseparable or interdependent parts of a unitary whole. The copyright in the literary work shall be secured and held jointly by the co-authors in the percentages listed below.

All income, licensing fees, and royalties from the literary work, as well as from any and all subsidiary rights of every kind, shall be divided as follows:

To ____________________ ___% (__________ percent)
To ____________________ ___% (__________ percent)
To ____________________ ___% (__________ percent)
To ____________________ ___% (__________ percent)

Total 100% (One hundred percent)

Each party shall keep the others fully informed of the progress of all negotiations had in connection with licensing, and the disposition of any subsidiary rights therein. No license for the use or publication of the literary work, or for the disposition of any subsidiary rights therein, shall be valid without the approval of all joint authors/owners.

All moneys shall be paid directly to the joint authors/owners at their respective addresses herein stated below.

In all credits, advertisements, posters, or other printed matter used in connection with the literary work, the names of the parties shall be listed as joint authors. In no event shall any name appear without the others.

All expenses, which may reasonably be incurred under this agreement, shall be mutually agreed upon in advance, and shall be shared according to the percentage of interest of the parties.

Nothing contained herein creates a partnership between the joint authors. Their relation shall be one of collaboration on a single literary work.

The term of this agreement shall be the life of the copyright in the literary work and any renewals thereof.

After the death of a joint author, the survivor(s) shall cause to be paid to the estate of the decedent the decedent’s share of the proceeds of the literary work and of subsidiary rights therein, and furnish to the deceased joint authors’ estate a true copy of all agreements pertaining thereto.

This agreement shall be to the benefit of, and shall be binding upon and oblige the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the parties.

WORK FOR HIRE AGREEMENT

Between ____________________ (the Hiring Party) and ____________________ (the Contractor) this document confirms that a copyrightable work of intellectual property commissioned by Hiring Party is a "work–made-for–hire" as specified under §101 of the 1976 Copyright Act of the United States.

Description of the commissioned work for hire:

_________________________________________________
_________________________________________________

It is expressly understood by Contractor that their efforts are specially ordered and commissioned, that copyright in the commissioned work shall remain the property of Hiring Party, that all copyright forms will list Hiring Party as an author of a work–made-for–hire, and that Hiring Party has the sole and exclusive use of the commissioned work and any derivative works made therefrom.

It is further understood that all materials, data, property, and other items used in the creation of this commissioned work remain the property of Hiring Party, and that Hiring Party retains all rights in these materials, and that Contractor may use these materials only for the creation of the commissioned work.

Any unauthorized copying or other use of these materials or the commissioned work by anyone other than Contractor for this specific commission will be considered an infringement of Hiring Party’s copyright.

In the event that the commissioned work is not considered a work–made-for–hire, then it shall be deemed that Contractor has assigned to Hiring Party any and all existing copyrights therein throughout the United States and the world, and any and all rights of every kind, nature or description attaching to or which may attach to said work and/or embraced by or included in the copyright and any renewal and/or extension thereof, and any actions that may accrue from the date of creation thereof; in the United States and the world.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

1. Red Flag Words

There are words that, when found in an agreement that is not a work-for-hire document, should be deleted, as they are to the author’s detriment. They are perpetuity, forever, and universe.

There are other words/phrases that often exist in an agreement that are troublesome, but that can be modified by placing conditions on them. Some contracts, when stating the rights that the publishing house has, and referring to technological changes and inventions (such as CD-ROM, DVD, etc.), include the phrase “now and hereinafter devised.” This is called a future technologies clause. This is acceptable only if (1) the author is assured, in the agreement, of royalties being paid on whatever is devised or on the derivative works and (2) is consulted on and has approval of any new format.

2. Reversion of Rights: When is a book out of print?

A reversion of rights refers to the time at which the publisher no longer owns the rights to your book. When the rights revert to you, the author, you’re free to sell them again or do whatever you want with your book. However, this is more complicated than it seems. Take a look at this sample out-of-print clause:

“In the event the Work is at any time out of print, the Author may give notice thereof to the Publisher and in such event the Publisher shall declare within 60 days, in writing, whether it intends to keep the Work available for sale. The term “out of print” is defined as being unavailable in any of the formats specified previously in this Agreement. If the Publisher declares its intention to return the book to print, it shall act not later than six (6) months from the date of such notice. If within 60 days the Publisher does not declare in writing that it intends to keep the Work available for sale, then this Agreement shall terminate and all rights granted hereunder shall revert to the Author by way of a written reversion letter, together with any existing property originally furnished by the Author.”

There are a number of problematic issues. First, you are required to give notice to the publisher stating that you want the rights to revert to you. The publisher then has sixty days to respond as to whether they are going to continue selling the book. This takes on new meaning when looked at in the context of the print on demand (POD) controversy addressed below, as the publisher could receive the letter, state that they are setting up the book for POD sales, and then have another six months to accomplish that goal without any requirement of sales actually being made. Second, you should determine, with legal counsel if necessary, which rights you actually licensed to the publisher. The interpretation of rights has increased in complexity because of the advent of ebooks, POD, etc. Ideally, your contract should have specified that a book is only considered in print when copies are available for sale in the United States in an English language hardcover or paperback edition issued by the publisher and listed in its catalog. Most likely this is not the case, and in general publishers are now taking the position that if a book is available as POD, the requirement that the book is still for sale has been met, and therefore you are not entitled to exercise your termination rights.

There is quite a bit of controversy on that last point. The issue centers on the question of a POD book really a “book” as historically understood and by the definition just presented. The SCBWI and other authors’ groups are taking the position that a POD book is not a traditional book, but publishers are taking the position that because the material is capable of being printed, it falls within the definition of a book and therefore is considered in print. Until this definitional issue is resolved, you should, at the very least, attempt to negotiate a contract that specifies a minimum amount of sales are required in order for the publisher to maintain the rights to the book. In addition to the above, make sure that you obtain written acknowledgement from the publisher that your book is out of print—otherwise you could run into trouble if you want to sell it to a third party or license ebooks.

There is one other way to obtain rights back to your book, and that is the termination right granted under section 203 of the Copyright Act. This is too complex to discuss here, but this provision basically gives you the ability to get your rights back under certain conditions and if specific actions are taken. You can read the provision at the following link: usa.gov/Zq7NQ.

As the industry precedents change, the SCBWI will continue to keep its members informed as well as providing guidelines on how best to protect your rights.

3. Did Your Publisher Go Out Of Business

In what manner did the publisher go out of business? The three primary possibilities are as follows:

The publisher files for bankruptcy (voluntary
Once bankruptcy has been filed, the bankruptcy court has control over the publisher and the assets. In this case, the copyrights of the books (we are assuming the publisher holds the copyright) become assets of the bankrupt estate. This means that the trustee of the bankrupt corporation can either assign the assets to a third party or continue to sell them to pay off debts. It is extremely difficult to get the rights back for a product that has been published by a company that goes bankrupt. Clauses stating that the rights revert to you in case of bankruptcy have been found invalid; however, they are worth fighting for because they may give some basis for a reversion, particularly if advances have not yet been paid.

Creditors file for bankruptcy against the publisher (involuntary bankruptcy). The method of this bankruptcy is different in that creditors file for the bankruptcy rather than the publisher itself, but the implications are the same as above.

The publisher simply dissolves. First, what does your contract say? The out of print clause may be useful here. Even if there isn’t, take the position that the publisher will be unable to fulfill its obligations and is thus in breach. Technically in this case, the copyright holder no longer exists in law and so the rights would revert. You can do your best to protect yourself by having a clause that states if the publisher is no longer actively marketing your book, the rights revert immediately. Tying this clause to sales of the book can be dangerous, particularly in the era of POD and ebooks.

However, if the publisher was sold or assigned the rights to a third party before it dissolves, then unless the contract specifically has wording to the contrary; the copyrights would belong to the assignees or the purchaser. The wording in most contracts does allow such assignments, but sometimes specifically requires the author’s/illustrator’s consent, so look carefully at your agreement. Normally, if it is assigned or purchased, then the assignee/purchaser remains obligated to all the terms of the contract.
ARCHIVING YOUR WORK:
KNOW NOW
“Authors and illustrators can contact archivists for advice at any point in their career, but earlier is better,” says NCLC curator Terri Goldich. “Archivists can give advice about home storage and organization prior to donating materials, which can make the donation process smoother and help preserve materials before they leave home.” Arne Nixon Center librarian Jennifer Crow adds, “There are a number of reasons why authors might donate papers early in their career. Proper storage and preservation should be done before damage might occur. Home storage space and conditions are often problematic for optimal upkeep of materials.” “In fact,” says Ellen Ruffin, curator of the de Grummond Children’s Literature Collection, “many of our donors find it a relief to pack up boxes and send them to a place that will organize, preserve, and protect their work.”

Key factors to consider when choosing where to place your work are your comfort level with the facility’s ability to care for it, your accessibility to the material once donated, if your work is a good fit, and how you will relate to the curator who will advise on the process.

You should also ask the facility about how your material would be used by scholars, students, and others, what its current acquisition goals are, and what it will do to promote your work within the collection. “Many archives have active online presences (website, blog, Facebook page) announcing new contributions and generally making a splash,” says Ruffin. “The de Grummond also has a newsletter in which we recognize new contributors and a gallery in which we exhibit the original works.” The Arne Nixon Center issues a press release and announcement about donations and tells visiting classes. The NCLC has a similar setup, and Goldich says their material also travels quite a bit to exhibitions and to publishers for the purposes of reprinting.

“Activity can vary quite a bit,” Mazza Museum director Ben Sapp explains, “so it’s important to find out in advance what’ll be done. Some institutions exist to house and protect the material and are not concerned with making it available to the public; others are concerned more with viewing material than with archival care.”

As to benefits, Tomie dePaola says, “When I started out in the early sixties, there were horror stories floating around about original art from well-known books disappearing into unknown hands only to turn up for sale on the open market without the knowledge of the illustrators who created it, about original art being lost forever, and even just thrown away. These types of abuses were more common when illustration was work-for-hire, being paid a flat fee instead of royalties.”

But even now, material that’s not protected can be damaged or lost. “Emotionally, it makes me very content to know that my work is safe, well cared for in a protective environment, available to researchers and especially schoolchildren, who are welcome to visit and see original art and manuscripts and will be long after I’m gone and books are out of print,” says dePaola, whose work is at NCLC.
